HEBER NATIONS ON STAND DENIES BEER CONSPIRACY

Declares He Merely Tried to Help Brother, Gus, Then Dry Agent, to 'Catch' Griesediecks.

TRUSTED IN PRATHER TO AID HIM, HE SAYS

Repeats Testimony of Two Former Trials in Which He Was Convicted but Got Reversal.

Heber Nations, former State Labor Commissioner, yesterday began his testimony in his third trial on the charge of conspiracy to violate the Volstead act, by furnishing protection to the Griesedieck brewery in making and selling beer in 1923-24.

After half an hour his testimony was interrupted by adjournment of court until 10 a. m. tomorrow. The jury, which is impounded, is at Hotel Jefferson. It is not likely that the case will go to the jury before Tuesday. Nations was convicted in his two previous trials, and sentenced to imprisonment and fine, but the judgments were reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals because of errors.

Speaking clearly and facing the jury with an air of confidence, Nations denied the charge of Charles S. Prather, former State Food and Drug Commissioner, chief Government witness, that he conspired with Prather to obtain money from the Griesedieck concern for protection.

Denies Knowledge of Bribes.

He declared, as in his former trials, that he tried to help his brother, Gus O. Nations, then local chief of Federal prohibition enforcement, to "catch" the Griesediecks in violations of the law. In this effort, he said, he asked Prather to assist him, and he knew of Prather's meetings with Raymond B. Griesedieck, vice-president of the brewing company. But he said he supposed that Prather was trying to get the information which he sought for his brother's use, and declared he did not know or suspect that Prather was taking money from the brewer.

Prather has testified that he received several pay-offs of about $1000 each, and that he gave the money to Heber Nations, who would take two-thirds and return one-third to Prather. Nations yesterday denied emphatically that he had ever received or seen a cent of brewery money.

Nations said he was 41 years old —his brother Gus is 36—and that he was married and had two children. He went to Jefferson City as a newspaper correspondent and six years later bought an interest in the Jefferson City Post. May 1, 1923, he became State Labor Commissioner, and served about a year in that position.

No Business; No Job.

Asked "What are you doing now?" he replied, "Nothing. No business, no job."

He was asked the reason, and started to make a reply to the effect that his indictment and prosecution had ruined his business chances. This reply brought an objection and was ruled out.

"Did you sympathize with your brother in his efforts to enforce the liquor laws?" he was asked. This question also, was ruled out, but Nations was permitted to say that he talked to his brother about the problem of "catching" breweries in "running out" beer.

He told of conversations with Gus Nations and with Douglas Baker, a prohibition agent, since deceased, as to the difficulty of "catching" breweries in such violations. The difficulty, as explained by Gus Nations in his testimony lay in the fact that the brewer, having a cereal beverage permit, had the right to make real beer, to be dealcoholized later. Hence, it meant nothing to enter the brewery and find beer; the brewer must be caught sending out the beer to customers.

Asked Prather to Help.

He told of having repeated to Gus the reports which he had heard, that Griesedieck's was selling beer "all over town," and said that Gus replied. "Don't bring me criticism, bring me information, and I'll do the rest."

Nations said he later talked with Prather who was then about to take over the duties of State Beverage Inspector, about Gus' official difficulties. He said he asked Prather to get information from the brewery as to the time of "run-

SAYS SECRETARY ADAMS INSULTED COAST GUARD

Congressman Warren of North Carolina Refers to Speech on Killing of Liquor Runners.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Congressman Warren (Dem.), North Carolina, said today that remarks made by Secretary of the Navy Adams, now on the way to the London Arms Conference, in a speech in Boston were a "deliberate insult and slur" against the Coast Guard.

Warren read from a newspaper article in which Adams was quoted as saying that the officers who fired on the liquor runner, Black Duck, killing three men and wounding one, were "not Navy men but Coast Guardsmen."

The North Carolinian said such an utterance was unworthy of a man holding the high office occupied by the Secretary of the Navy and added that Secretary Adams had "exercised his usual propensity for saying the wrong thing at the wrong time."

Warren paid tribute to the Coast Guard, saying that no "braver, truer or more honorable man than Admiral F. C. Billard (Coast Guard commandant), has ever worn the uniform of an American officer."

HEIRS BY ILLEGAL MARRIAGE HELD LEGAL BY PARIS COURT

Second Family of Wealthy Frenchman to Share Equally With His Children in U. S.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—American heirs of Rene Degas, brother of the painter Edgar Degas, today lost the first skirmish for complete control of a fortune estimated at many million francs. A Paris tribunal held that the heirs by a second marriage in France had an equal right to participate.

Rene Degas in the seventies married Miss Messon of New Orleans, La. They had three children. He deserted his family and obtained a divorce in France and married again. His American heirs contended the second marriage was illegal. The court today found that, although the marriage was in fact illegal, it was contracted in good faith by both parties and that, therefore, the three children of the second union had a right to share equally with their three half-brothers in America in the estate. The case probably will be appealed.

NEW STORM HITS BRITISH ISLES

First Snow of the Winter in London.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—Stormy weather again struck the British Isles today. Liners reaching Plymouth reported fighting winds that reached more than 80 miles an hour. Torrential rains accompanied by hail and snow struck Wales and in Northern Midlands, while floods were reported in many districts.

London, which hitherto has been immune from the worst vagaries of the weather was visited by the first snow of the winter this afternoon much to the discomfort of hundreds of thousands of spectators attending the seven big league association football games in the London district.

TELLS HOW HE GOT UP 'SECRET BRITISH' PAPER AS SATIRE

Former English Army Doctor Testifies Before Senators of Source of Shearer's 'Amazing Document.'

INTENDED AS JIBE AT NORTHCLIFFE

Wanted to Offset Effect of Propaganda for League—Inquiry Is Adjourned Indefinitely.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Senate investigators ascertained today from the author of the "amazing, secret British document," given to the navy by William B. Shearer, that it was a "skit on British propaganda," written as "satire" 10 years ago.

Dr. Maloney said that 500,000 copies of the "Skit" were sold and it was run in serial form in the Canadian press as a piece of satire. He said the State Department had investigated it in 1919 and knew all about it.

Statement by Allen.

Commenting later on the revelations, Senator Allen (Rep.), Kansas, a member of the investigating committee, issued a statement asserting in part:

"The disclosures touching the 'amazing secret document' merely constitute another revelation of the gullibility of those who employ professional lobbyists at Washington. Shearer, glib and pretentious as he was, had no difficulty in selling his services to men of great business standing and of undoubted ability. Altogether they have paid him for various alleged services over $50,000.

"He told them he could help them. He knew more about Washington and her official intrigue than they did. He spoke a language with which they were not acquainted; acted on the gullibility and the ignorance upon which he preyed was their greed for special privilege.

"Shearer was outstanding because he fooled the very elect. They were eager to be fooled; they wanted the Geneva conference to fail; they wanted a large shipbuilding program launched and they had certain friends in the admiralties of both the United States and Great Britain whose natural sympathies were along the same line. It gave a man of Shearer's capacity a fortunate background.

"Whole Episode Unsavory."

"The whole episode, of course, is unsavory. American big business men have established a recognized standard of honesty. Their employment of the Shearers of life indicates their willingness to depart from that standard on certain occasions.

"Today most Senators decline to receive any man representing an industrial interest because they have learned from bitter experience that the lobbyist himself is very likely to write to his employer a false account of any meeting with a member of Congress."

The document purported to be an accounting of British spy activities in this country and was put out anonymously under the title "The Reconquest of America." Former Postmaster-General Burleson barred it from the mails. It was sold at 5 cents a copy.

The Senate committee laughed with the crowd in the room as Dr. Maloney unfolded his story and as he described as "stupid" all "this fuss about it." The so-called document was addressed to Prime Minister Lloyd George and was dated from the British Consul's office, New York City.

Note to the Readers.

A note to readers on the flyleaf of the Maloney "skit" read:

"A carbon copy of this incomplete and unsigned document was sent to us with an anonymous note stating that it had been found near 500 Madison Avenue. At that address there is an apartment house. Inquiry revealed that Sir William Wiseman, chief of the British Secret Service, had recently resided there. The document showed internal evidence of authenticity, and it, moreover, revealed a remarkable picture of the all-pervading system of British intrigue in this country; so, after verifying such of the disclosures as the sources at our command enabled us to investigate, we considered it to be a patriotic duty to make known the document to the American public that they might pass final judgment upon it."

DETROIT FIREMEN FOREGO PAY RISE TO AID UNEMPLOYED

Use Money to Hire Men Whose Families Need Necessities, They Ask.

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 11.—Believing that the 5 per cent pay increase voted them by the Board of Fire Commissioners Thursday might better be used toward alleviating poverty and unemployment in the city, Detroit firemen announced today that they would ask the Commission to rescind its action Monday.

The money represented by the proposed raise, approximately $215,900 annually, should be used to employ men who need work for "the necessities of their families," Capt. Joseph A. Creed of Engine Co. No. 2, spokesman for the firemen, said today.

Under the present salary scale the chief receives $7500; deputy chiefs, $4500; battalion chiefs, $4008; captains, $3180; lieutenants, $2880 and pipemen and laddermen, $2420.

THREE FLYERS, LOST A WEEK IN EILESON SEARCH, SAFE

Capt. Pat Reid and Two Passengers Land at Unalakleet, Norton Sound.

By the Associated Press.

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, Jan. 11.—Capt. Pat Reid and his two passengers, William H. Hughes and Jim Hutchinson, missing since they took off a week ago from here for Nome, arrived in their big cabin plane safely today at Unalakleet, Norton Sound. Maj. H. C. Deckard radioed here from the trading post at Nulato. They succeeded in getting the ship in the air again today.

The message did not state where the trio had been stranded. Unalakleet is about 150 miles across Norton Sound from Nome, south of a direct air line from here to Nome, and the plane may have been down out on the ice or inland.

Maj. Deckard was with Matt Niemenen, Alaskan pilot, and Sam Macauley, mechanic, in the other cabin plane which took off at the same time as Reid's plane last Saturday for Nome to search for pilot Carl Ben Eielson and Earl Borland, missing since Nov. 9 last. Niemenen lost Reid in a blizzard which they encountered after flying more than half the distance. Niemenen landed his plane safely at Nulato, more than 300 miles west of here, about 100 miles northeast of Unalakleet.

WRIT TO MAKE BOARD ACCEPT 25-CENT PHOTOS OF BARBER

Petition Charges Applicants Are Required to Pay "Official Photographer" $2.

By the Associated Press.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 11.—A temporary writ of mandamus to compel the Missouri State Board of Barber Examiners to accept two 25-cent photographs of William Woerdehoff, hotel barber, was issued by Judge Thomas J. Seehorn in Circuit Court yesterday. Hearing on a permanent writ was set for Monday.

I. M. Lux, attorney for Woerdehoff, in the petition, alleges that the two photographs required of applicants for barber licenses in Kansas City should be made by a certain "official photographer," who charges $2 for the two pictures.

Lux asserts in the suit that his client had two photographs made for 50 cents and that the board refused him a license because the pictures were not made by the "official photographer."

NEW AIRPLANE RATES FALL BELOW RAIL AND PULLMAN

Transcontinental Charges in Some Instances Slightly Lower, Others Slightly Higher.

New airplane rates from St. Louis now in effect over the Transcontinental Air Transport—Maddux Air Lines—are slightly less than the combined rail and Pullman rates in many instances.

A $13 air fare has been instituted between St. Louis and Kansas City, as compared with a combined rail and Pullman fare of $13.79. Air fare is $1.04 higher than the combined rail and Pullman fares between Columbus, O., and St. Louis, but between Columbus and Indianapolis it is $1.01 cheaper by plane.

Other fares are correspondingly low, T. B. Clement, general traffic manager of the air line announced, including a $9 rate between Kansas City and Wichita.

CHARGES WASTE IN FLORIDA CAMPAIGN AGAINST FRUIT FLY

Wood, G. O. P. Congressman, Says $15,000,000 Sought by Hoover for This Work Is Unnecessary.

"6000 MEN DOING THE WORK OF 100"

Senator Fletcher in Reply Discredits Reports of Maladministration of Fund.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Chairman Wood (Rep.), Indiana, of the House Appropriations Committee said today that there had been a woeful waste of money in the effort to eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly in Florida.

Wood said the appropriation of $15,000,000 proposed by President Hoover and the Department of Agriculture to carry on eradication work was absolutely unnecessary.

"Only a moderate appropriation with which they can carry on inspection work to allay the fears of the rest of the country is needed," he said. "The quarantine regulations enforced on Florida have been lifted so the people can market their fruit. It has been many months since a Mediterranean fruit fly has been found in Florida and not lately has even a larva been found."

Doubts Corruption Charge.

At the same time, however, Senator Fletcher (Dem.), Florida, said in a statement that he placed no credence in charges of corruption and maladministration of the $5,125,000 appropriation authorized by Congress.

The charges have been circulated in Florida and in Washington, Fletcher said, adding that one of the complainants was an attorney who had failed to obtain a Federal judgeship.

"The charges were being made," he asserted, "by irresponsible people who want to charge anything against anybody who is trying to do something."

The Florida Senator expressed confidence in Wilmon Newell, State Plant Commissioner, who is administering the Federal eradication fund, and made public a statement he had recently received from the commissioner answering some of the allegations.

Discussing a statement that Federal money had been turned over to the State Plant Board, Newell said not a single dollar had ever been turned over to the board or expended by it.

"The Government," he added, "has engaged in its own work and has expended its own money."

Wood said the Appropriations Committee would consider the estimate of $15,000,000 during hearings on the first deficiency appropriations bill.

"6000 Doing Work of 100."

"Then it will come out," he declared, "that there has been a woeful waste of money. This can be proved to the satisfaction of any fair-minded man. Why, 6000 men have been doing in Florida what 100 or 150 ought to do in fruit fly work.

"Five or six agents of the Treasury Department have been investigating claims down there and what they found would astound you."

Wood did not disclose what the agents had learned.

Discussions have been going on between members of the delegation in the House and a Florida group, led by E. E. Calloway, State Republican Committeeman, over the $15,000,000 appropriation favored by President Hoover for fruit fly eradication work.

Chairman Wood, who had an agent of the Treasury Department investigate the need for the appropriation, has conferred with members of the visiting group, and says the amount of money requested is not required.

30-INCH SNOW IN ARIZONA

Prescott Buried by Heavy Fall—Ortiz Rubio Snowbound.

By the Associated Press.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Jan. 11.—President-elect Pascual Ortiz Rubio of Mexico and his party, who have been at Grand Canyon, were cut off from communication with the outside world today by the worst snowstorm in Arizona in years. Telephone and telegraph wires are down in many sections and snow continued to fall. President-elect Ortiz Rubio's secretary said the party planned to remain at the canyon until Jan. 15.

Prescott was buried under 30 inches of snow today. Traffic was blocked, automobiles being stalled on highways in every direction. In the mountains south and west of Prescott snow has drifted to a depth of several feet.

STIMSON OPPOSES GETTING LEAGUE'S OK ON NAVY PACT

Willing to Co-operate With Geneva Disarmament Plans but Wants London Treaty Independent.

AGREEMENT TO FIT CHANGED WORLD

American Delegates Consider Kellogg Plan and Social-Economic Exchanges Basis for Work.

By the Associated Press.

S. S. GEORGE WASHINGTON, AT SEA, Jan. 11.—Reconciliation of the work of the London parley with the disarmament plans of the League of Nations appeared today to the American delegation on this vessel, ten days before the opening of the meeting, one of the outstanding questions with which the conference will have to deal in its early sessions.

While America enters the conference regarding the possible eventual agreement as binding without recourse to any other organization, the American delegates will be prepared to discuss the attitude of others that such an agreement should be linked with the work of the League as far as they are concerned.

It was learned that Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson was ready to agree that the results of the conference should be turned over to the preparatory disarmament commission of the League as a step in furthering the commission's work on the question of general disarmament, in which the United States has co-operated.

Wants Independent Agreement.

On the other hand, America is prepared to oppose vigorously any plan to make the conference agrement for the United States dependent upon approval by the League machinery.

It is the attitude of the American delegates, according to the same authority, that consideration of limitations by the conference should be based largely on the changed world conditions since the conference of 1921. Paramount among these changes are considered to be the Kellogg anti-war pact, the rapid expansion of world social and economic exchanges, the growth in number of treaties of arbitration and conciliation, and also the benefits derived by nations who are members of the League of Nations.

Unlike the situation in 1921 when the League was in its infancy and the theory of the Kellogg pact for renunciation of war was a diplomatic dream, the present conference will meet in a changed atmosphere with only reconciliation of the varied views of the value of there agencies necessary.

If Patience Is Needed.

Secretary Stimson has steadfastly declined to comment on the plans of the conference, but he is known to feel patience and willingness to devote almost unlimited time to evolve an agreement which will overcome this obstacle.

It was considered doubtful whether this question, however, will be discussed in the conversations that Stimson is arranging with the heads of other delegations preliminary to the opening session, since the matter is regarded as directly concerning the conference and not any two nations.

A boisterous sea throughout today further postponed the conference which the Secretary of State anticipates holding before reaching Plymouth on Friday, all of the delegates rested in their staterooms. Stimson chose for his reading some poems and also "memories of the Civil War," written by his father, Lewis Stimson.

METHODIST REFORMER DEFENDS DR. BROOKS

Deets Pickett Congratulates Missouri U. Head for Action on Sex Questionnaire.

Post-Dispatch Bureau,
201-205 Kellogg Building.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Dr. Stratton D. Brooks, president of the University of Missouri, who was condemned by a committee of the American Association of University Professors for his actions in connection with the circulation of a sex questionnaire among university students, has found a defender in Deets Pickett, secretary of the Methodist Board of Temparance, Prohibition and Public Morals.

Pickett congratulated Brooks in a letter made public today saying that, in his opinion, "the president and the Board of Curators of the university were not only fully justified in the action taken but their failure to act would have been a betrayal of trust imposed by parents who send their sons and daughters to the university."

"Questions implying the loss of honor or virtue on the part of the one questioned," Pickett continued, "and unsupported by any probability or charge seem to me to constitute gross affronts to the dignity of those addressed, especially when the one questioned is a young lady.

"I do not believe the time has come when parents are indifferent to such questioning of the young women of their families or when they are oblivious to a degradation of the position of women."

BULLET HITS CHILD 400 FEET FROM HOLDUP

Charles Whitener, 4041 Castleman Av., Victim When Sergt. T. H. Long Fires One Shot at Car.

THIEVES TAKE $18 AT FILLING STATION

Officer Was Inside at Time—Men Escape on Foot After Car Is Caught in Traffic Jam.

Police Sergt. Thomas H. Long fired a shot at two robbers in an automobile last night and killed a 7-year-old boy, Charles Warren Whitener, of 4041 Castleman avenue. The robbers, with $18 stolen from a filling station, escaped on foot after stalling their automobile in a collision.

Sergt. Long, patrolling his precinct in Magnolia Avenue District, was in the washroom of the filling station, a Shell Station at the northeast corner of Russell boulevard and Thurman avenue, at 8:30 o'clock, when the robbers drove in, held up the attendant, Carl Retter, and took $18 from his money changer, flourishing pistols.

As they drove away, Retter ran to the washroom and called Long. Long hurried out and fired one shot at the automobile, then moving north on Thurman avenue about 125 feet away. The bullet passed the automobile and struck the Whitener boy as he emerged from a Kroger grocery at the southwest corner of Thurman and Shaw avenue, two short blocks, or about 400 feet, from the filling station. The boy was shot through the heart.

The robber's car, dashing across Shaw avenue against an automatic stop signal, scraped against a westbound automobile and stalled. The robbers jumped out, ran north and disappeared into an alley. Paul James, manager of the Kroger store, saw the boy fall and a moment later heard the crash. He carried the boy into the store and laid him on the floor.

Boy's Birthday Today.

Realizing that he had shot a bystander, Sergt. Long did not fire again and abandoned his pursuit of the robbers.

The boy, who would have been 7 years old today, had been sent by his mother, Mrs. Otto L. Whitener, to buy a box of matches. He was accompanied by Virginia Turner, 11 years old, of 4027 Castleman avenue, who was close on his heels when he left the store.

Virginia ran to the Whitener home and told the mother that Charles had been hurt. Mrs. Whitener hurried to the store, where she found Sergt. Long leaning over her son's body. The Sergeant took the boy to the city hospital in an automobile. Mrs. Whitener called her husband from his work in the receiving department of the St. Louis Dairy Co. and followed to the hospital.

Officer Badly Shaken.

Sergt. Long, at the hospital, was in a highly nervous condition and spoke so incoherently that receiving room physicians gave him a sedative. Other policemen took him to Magnolia Station, where he made his report.

The parents followed their son's body to the morgue, where his possessions, two nickles and a toy watch, found in his overcoat pockets, were turned over to them. The mother, weeping, insisted to reporters that the policeman was not at fault. "I feel so sorry for that man," she volunteered. "He said to me in the grocery, 'My God, I feel like shooting myself.'"

The boy, one of three children, was in his first year at the Sherman Public School.

Sergt. Long, who is 56 years old, has been a policeman since 1907, and a sergeant since 1924. He lives at 3948 Humphrey street.

Capt. Dineen of Magnolia District said that he had instructed his men to keep a particular watch

"YOUNG GUARD" TO HOLD CONTROL OF SENATE G. O. P.

La Follette Placed on Finance Committee Over Protests of Four of Organization Leaders.

ANOTHER WESTERNER ALSO RECOGNIZED

Thomas of Idaho Put on Powerful Body in Harmony Program After Party Conference.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Control of the Senate Republican organization by the "young guard" and Western independents as against the Old Guard regulars was claimed today as the reorganized party machine was formally approved.

Senator Nye of North Dakota, who was a member of the Committee of Committees which fought out the issue of recognition of various factions in the new set-up, made the claim of the majority against the Old Guard.

"There is a new majority in the Senate Republican party," he said off the floor. The party conference and the Senate had unanimously approved the new organization which gives places on the Finance Committee to Senators La Follette of Wisconsin and Thomas of Idaho.

La Follette is one of the Western independents who have rewritten the Republican tariff bill in combination with the Democrats in the interests of agriculture alone. He was placed on the committee over the opposition of four of the Old Guard—Reed of Pennsylvania, Moses, New Hampshire, Bingham, Connecticut, and Deneen of Illinois.

No Explanation by Smoot.

Senator Smoot of Utah, the veteran chairman of the Finance Committee, offered no explanation of his vote in placing La Follette on this committee when Senator Wheeler, (Dem.), Montana, asked in the Senate if Smoot had not threatened to quit if the Wisconsin independent were chosen.

The Utah Senator, an old guardsman, merely told the Senate he had voted to put Lafollette on his committee. That was all.

Senator Watson of Indiana continues at the helm of the reorganized Republican machine. Senator McNary of Oregon, claimed by the "young guard" and whose work as chairman of the Committee on Committees brought about a solution of vexing problems of recognition of the party's various factions, becomes the assistant leader.

The Finance Committee drafts the revenue and tariff legislation and has hitherto been considered a committee reserved for the party's regular of regulars. Senator Thomas was the candidate of the "young guard" for membership on it, and Senator Lafollette of the Western independents.

McMaster Denied Post.

The discontent of Senator McMaster of South Dakota in failing to get a place on the Interstate Commerce Committee developed the only rupture in the Republican harmony program as the new slate went through the party conference and then through the Senate.

Senator Howell of Nebraska, after the new set-up had been approved, complained that only two Republican Senators from west of the Mississippi River were on the Interstate Commerce Committee. He also pointed out that McMaster outranked Senator Hastings of Delaware, who got the place.

Senator Norbeck of South Dakota decried McMaster's failure to get on this committee. After Senator Bingham had pointed out that the committee on committees was composed of a majority of Western Senators, Norbeck said that McMaster should have been given the Interstate Commerce Committee assignment, rather than Thomas the finance post.

At the party conference, Senator Glenn of Illinois brought up the question of party regularity and advocated that Republicans give closer attention to the administration. This drew a retort from Senator Norris of Nebraska, of the Republican independents, who insisted the independents in fighting the Republican tariff bill were actually carrying out the expressed wishes of President Hoover.

JOHN F. SHEPLEY.

JOHN F. SHEPLEY, LAWYER-BANKER, IS DEAD AT 71

Former Chairman of St. Louis Union Trust Co., Succumbs at Home After a Year's Illness.

John Foster Shepley, former chairman of the board of directors of the St. Louis Union Trust Co., died yesterday at his home, 4943 Pershing avenue, of arterio sclerosis. He was 71 years old and had been declining in health for more than a year.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. in Christ Church Cathedral. Burial will be in Bellefontaine Cemetery.

A native of St. Louis, Mr. Shepley had been connected with the trust company, first holding a vice presidency and later being elected president, since the merger that formed the concern more than 25 years ago. Prior to that he was connected with the Union Trust Co., one of the parties to the merger.

Admitted to Bar in 1882.

After attending Washington University, he went to Yale University, graduating in 1880, and then attended the St. Louis Law School until 1882, when he was admitted to the bar. Until 1900 he was a member of the law firm of Lionberger & Shepley.

Then, at the instance of the late George A. Madill, he became associated with the Union Trust Co., of which Madill was president. In 1903, when the Union merged with the St. Louis Trust Co., Mr. Shepley was made a vice president. Later he was elected president and then chairman of the board.

In his younger days Mr. Shepley was an ardent sportsman, a polo player and one of the original members of the St. Louis Country Club. He also was a member of the Round Table Club, of the University Club, and, until its disbanding, of the St. Louis Club. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of the Missouri Botanical Garden for more than 20 years and was treasurer of the Missouri Association of Occupational Therapy.

Interested in Civic Work.

He was connected with many civic movements and was a member, with his family, of Christ Church Cathedral.

Surviving are his widow, the former Miss Sarah Hitchcock, daughter of the late Ethan Allen Hitchcock, former Ambassador to Russia and member of the McKinley and Roosevelt Cabinets; and three children, John R. Shepley, a vice president of the St. Louis Union Trust Co.; Ethan A. H. Shepley, an attorney with the law firm of Nagel & Kirby, and Miss Margaret Shepley.

Mrs. William S. Sims, wife of Admiral Sims and a sister of Mrs. Shepley, and Mrs. Charles A. Coolidge, a sister of Mr. Shepley, arrived last night from their homes in Boston to attend the funeral.

HARRY F. SINCLAIR STOPS IN CITY ON INSPECTION TRIP

Oil Magnate Visiting Properties of Prairie and Rio Grande Companies.

Harry F. Sinclair, oil magnate who was involved in the Teapot Dome scandal and who recently was released from the jail at Washington, D. C., after serving two sentences, one for contempt of court and the other for contempt of the Senate, passed through St. Louis last night in a special car en route to points in Texas. Sinclair's party was joined at St. Louis by W. S. Fitzpatrick, of Independence, Kan., chairman of the Prairie Oil & Gas Co.

Sinclair declined to affirm or deny the report that the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Corporation is merging with the Prairie Oil Co., and that the two concerns will take over the Rio Grande Oil Co. He admitted that the Prairie Oil Co., and the Sinclair Consolidated have been conducting examinations of each other's properties.

"Officers of the Sinclair Consolidation and of the Prairie Oil Co., are taking a trip to points in Texas, Arizona and California for the purpose of inspecting the properties of the Rio Grande Oil Co.," Sinclair said. "That is all I care to say. Draw any conclusion you care to."

HOOVER BROUGHT INTO MEXICAN CONSULATE ROW

At Request of Texas Senators He Has Conference With Acting Secretary of State Cotton.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Acting Secretary of State Cotton said today he had been actively negotiating with the Mexican Government regarding the closing of the Mexican Consulate at Laredo, Tex., but could make no statement as to the progress of the negotiations.

Cotton's statement was made after he had conferred with President Hoover and Senators Sheppard and Connally and Congressman Garner of Texas. He said that the Senators and the Democratic House leader had been giving him constant help, as had Gov. Dan Moody of Texas, who has held a number of conferences with the Acting Secretary of State over the long-distance telephone.

Negotiations Under Way.

The White House conference was requested by the Texas Senators and Garner, who said afterwards that any statement that was to be made would be made by Cotton. They added, however, that negotiations looking to the reopening of the consulate, closed by Mexico in retaliation for threats of arrest made by the District Attorney there against former President Calles, had been in progress for 10 days.

At the White House it was said Gov. Moody was being informed that President Hoover was taking a personal interest in the Laredo situation, although necessarily the negotiations with the Mexican Government were being handled through the State Department.

The Texas Senators and Garner said the situation at Laredo was extremely serious, due to a tremendous congestion of freight destined for Mexico. So great is this congestion that the railroads serving Laredo have declared an embargo against the city and are rerouting freight from Mexico over many hundreds of miles of their tracks.

Statement by Connally.

After a conference at the White House, Senator Connally issued a statement in which he expressed an opinion that the Mexican Government would "certainly not be so blind as to persist" in its course of conduct, which is seriously injuring not alone the trade and commerce of Laredo, but of the entire United States and Mexico as well.

"I shall continue to keep in touch with the State Department and urge that our Government give protection to American citizens by insisting that Mexico shall withdraw its acts of reprisal and discrimination."

Railroads holding freight for movement to Mexico near Laredo, were authorized today by the Interstate Commerce Commission to route it by way of Brownsville and Eagle Pass.

Holding that an emergency exists upon the lines of the Missouri Pacific, the International-Great Northern, the Texas Mexican and the Texas and New Orleans railroads, the commission issued its special order to expedite movement of traffic and to prevent congestion.

The commission also ordered that rates applicable to the traffic shipped over routes other than those designated by the shippers should be the same which would be applicable at the date of shipment over the routes designated.

If the rates were higher, however, the rate over the route of movement would apply.

Mexican Railways Urge Routing to Avoid Laredo.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 11.—The Mexican National Railways today published advertisements recommending to shippers that they consign goods to the United States by way of Suidad Juarez, Piedras Negras or Matamoras, explaining that the railways are in a position to handle all shipments through those ports.

No mention is made of Neuvo Laredo, which is across the Rio Grande from Laredo, Tex., from which city the Mexican Government recently removed its consulate. The action followed differences with District Attorney Valls of that city as to his attitude toward Mexicans.

TWO STATE BANKS CLOSE

Depositories at Mineola and Sari Grove Suspend.

By the Associated Press.

JEFFERSON CITY, Jan. 11.—State Finance Commissioner S. L. Cantley was notified today of the closing of the Mineola Bank of Mineola, on Highway 40, and the Bank of Sari Grove, Greene County. Both banks were closed by orders of their boards of directors.

The Sari Grove Bank was closed because of frozen assets, its board said. No reason was given for the closing of the Mineola Bank.

LA FOLLETTE RAPS SMOOT FOR ATTACK UPON PROFESSORS

Declares Wisconsin U. Economists' Reports on Farm Tariffs Are Wholly Disinterested.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Senator La Follette (Rep.), Wisconsin, in the Senate today described as "entirely erroneous" a statement by Senator Smoot (Rep.), Utah, that W. T. Rawleigh, Freeport, Ill., manufacturer had "purchased the services" of three professors of economy at the University of Wisconsin to study and report on farm tariffs, including sugar.

Smoot had termed Rawleigh, who maintains a tariff bureau in Washington, a multimillionaire with funds "to indulge his whim for propaganda." He objected to having the Wisconsin professors' conclusions "foisted upon the American people as an unbiased and dispassionate analysis of agricultural tariffs."

La Follette said the three Wisconsin professors received no money for their tariff studies and worked free from outside pressure. Rawleigh, he said, had a public record which "demonstrated the disinterested character of his activity in making possible the investigations."

Harrison Pays Tribute to Smoot.

Senator Harrison (Dem.), Mississippi, in opening the third day of debate on the sugar schedule, said: "If there is one issue to be presented in the next election it will be the tariff of sugar."

Harrison has an amendment pending to retain the present levy of 1.76 cents a pound on Cuban raw sugar as against a rate of 2.20 cents proposed by the Senate Finance Committee.

The Mississippian opened his speech with a tribute to Chairman Smoot of the Finance Committee, who yesterday, on his sixty-eighth birthday, delivered one of the most vigorous speeches of his 27 years in the Senate in favor of an increase in the sugar duty.

"There never has been in the United States a more energetic, hard-working, conscientious Senator than the chairman of the Finance Committee," he said.

The proposed increase in Cuban sugar duty was unjustified, would cost the American people $50,000,000 more for their sugar bills annually and increase the retail cost to the full extent of the advance and the facts justified a reduction instead of an increase in duty, he considered.

In 20 years the sugar tariff had cost the American people nearly $3,000,000,000, or more than twice as much as all the Government appropriations in that period for all agricultural purposes, including road building, he declared.

All the sugar produced in the cane state of Louisiana in one year, he continued, would have supplied the country for only two days.

"Yet they want to help that small percentage of people who have received these favors in the last 20 years," he said. "We've got to have sugar from abroad, It is a necessary of life."

Tilts With Smoot.

The Mississippi Senator assailed the entire Republican protective tariff policy, saying it had never given agriculture a chance.

"That's why you have a revolt in Republican ranks today," he said. "It hurts them more than anything else in a decade."

Harrison sparred frequently with Smoot during his speech. At one point the Mississippian said the Utah Senator "certainly is hard to please."

Harrison had referred to the investigation of the high price of sugar ordered by the late President Harding upon which the Tariff Commission based a recommendation for a reduction in duty to 1.23 cents. Smoot said that investigation was based on only two years when prices were high and if made today would show a need for a rate higher than 2.20 cents.

A conference of Republicans voted 19 to 15 to start Senate sessions earlier in the future to speed work on the Hawley-Smoot measure.

Taft Improving Rapidly.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Chief Justice Taft, under treatment in a hospital here for bladder trouble, was described today as being materially improved. He expects to leave Tuesday for a rest at Asheville, N. C. The Chief Justice is permitted to leave his bed each day and sit in his room. He is doing a great deal of reading, but is giving no attention to his judicial duties.

Heber Nations on Stand Denies Beer Plot

ning out" beer, and that Prather said he would do what he could.

Nations said Prather suggested that it should be arranged for Griesedieck to see him, and Nations made this arrangement through L. J. Gualdoni, a prohibition agent, as Gualdoni has testified.

Nations said that Prather did not wish to have his name mentioned to anyone in the matter, and that for this reason he did not tell Gus Nations that Prather was helping him. Prather reported to him from time to time, Nations said, and once said he had been invited into the brewery and had had a drink of beer. This, however, appeared to be from a stock kept for employes, and not a palpable violation of law.

"I never suspected that Prather was taking money," Nations said in answer to a question. "I thought he was a friend whom I could trust."

Beer Sellers Raided.

In January, 1924, he said, Prather reported to him that Griesedieck beer was being sold at Buck Keenan's bar, Seventh and Market streets, and at Joe Parisi's, Grand boulevard and Hebert street. He told Gus of this, and raids followed. Prather has said these raids were suggested to him by Raymond Griesedieck, who said the two places were not buying beer from him and should be closed as a part of the protection afforded to him.

The defendant then told of getting information through his uncle, M. H. McFarland, who testified to the same matter yesterday. McFarland, who worked under Nations in the St. Louis office of the State Labor Bureau, was asked by Nations, the latter said, to get information as to a future time when Keenan's would have beer, and did this, sending the information in a letter to Nations at Jefferson City. Nations said he made the information known in a letter to Gus Nations, then at Kansas City.

Two Interpretations.

This letter, said by Gus Nations to have reached him Feb. 20, 1924, is alleged by the defense to have caused the return of Gus to St. Louis, and his raid on the Griesedieck brewery, Feb. 21. The Government, on the other hand, has sought in the past trials to show that Gus Nations, while in Kansas City, overheard a telephone conversation which indicated to him that special investigators of the intelligence unit were investigating the St. Louis beer traffic and were about to raid Griesedieck's. Thereupon, the Government has held, Gus hurried back to St. Louis and "beat them to it."

The matter of the overheard telephone conversation has not come into the present trial thus far, but may appear in Government rebuttal testimony. Gus Nations has denied that he knew of the presence of the intelligence unit men, or of their plan for a raid.

After the raid, Heber Nations said, he read in the Post-Dispatch of a report that State officials had been protecting Griesedieck's. He said he judged that no other official but Prather could be referred to, and he sent for Prather, who arrived at midnight at Nations' home in Jefferson City.

"I wanted to make sure that Prather's skirts were clean," he said.

At this point court was adjourned.

Opposed Brewing Permit.

Cross-examination of Gus Nations consumed the morning session. Gus, principal defense witness and one of the defense counsel, gave his direct testimony Friday afternoon.

District Attorney Breuer, conducting the cross-examination, went into the subject of Gus Nations' official attitude, in opposing issuance of a cereal beverage permit to Griesedieck Bros. Brewing Co. in 1922, and got the witness to say he was "not pleased" when department officials at Washington issued the permit over his adverse report. Nations said his opposition was because the brewery had been caught violating the law once, causing the revocation of its former permit, and he felt its officers could not be trusted.

Breuer then dwelt on the length of time, more than a year, that Gus Nations endeavored unsuccessfully to "catch" the brewery in a violation. He sought to suggest that the catching could have been done by other methods than the "inside information" which Nations said was necessary. Why not, he asked, simply watch the brewery and follow any truck that went out? Nations replied that the truck might be hauling a legitimate cargo of beverage.

Says He Lacked Proof.

Nations repeated he had given all possible time and effort to the task, and said he had instructed the men under his direction to do all they could to get facts. He was asked who assisted him, and he said no one outside the service.

Breuer asked if W. C. Goshorn, a prohibition agent, since deceased, did not call Nations' attention to the open and notorious operation of Griesedieck's. "No," said Nations, "I discussed it with Goshorn. I had to leave Goshorn in charge of the office sometimes, and I told him not to overlook any chance to trace beer to its source.

"I saw beer in saloons myself, with Griesedieck's label on it," the witness said, "and I got anonymous letters, but I got no information to make a raid possible."

Nations was asked about a statement, made April 4, 1924, to John C. Dyott, now special prosecutor in the case, Harry Dingler and David Nolan of the intelligence unit, that a man had told him the Griesedieck brewery was operating with protection. At that time Nations refused to tell who the informant was. Yesterday, in reply to Breuer's question, he said the man was Goshorn. His statement, Nations said, had not been information on which he could act legally.

Reasons for Secrecy.

Breuer asked why the name of a man in the enforcement service should have been kept from men, also in the enforcement work. He said it was necessary that he should regularly conceal the sources of suggestions, in order that the others might have no hesitancy in giving him such suggestions. He spoke of Nolan and Dingler as being in "the so-called intelligence unit," and said he feared that anything he told them would be given to the newspapers.

Breuer inquired into details of Gus Nations' official reports and expense accounts. He brought out that, while Nations was in St. Louis on most of the dates previously named as the days when the Griesedieck brewery "ran out" beer, yet he was not in the vicinity of the brewery on those days, with one exception. On that day, the witness said, he passed the brewery and looked it over, but saw no sign of activity. He was asked if the brewery was ever kept under constant surveillance, and replied that it would have been impossible to "catch" the place in that manner. He said he and his agents had tried to arrange for a lookout point in the neighborhood, but had found nothing satisfactory.

Rented Brother's Automobile.

One of Gus Nations' official accounts, reviewed by Breuer, mentioned an "auto from H. Nations," used by agents for a trip into St. Louis County. The witness said this machine, the make of which was not stated, was one which Heber bought and lent to him, for his use and that of the agents. Heber received $1.50 an hour for use of the machine, and this was charged on Gus' official account, but Gus said the upkeep of the car cost more than the rental return, and that Gus had to make up a deficit of $300 or more out of his own pocket.

The reason for using Heber's car, Gus explained, was that the use of taxicabs and rented machines tended to cause "tip-offs" on coming raids.

Breuer asked the witness about the letter, shown in fragmentary form and pasted to another sheet, which Gus said he received from Heber while in Kansas City Feb. 20, 1924.

The torn letter, as pieced out from the witness' recollection, was:

> The information I wanted to bring you ought not to wait until Friday, but I could not give it to you over the 'phone tonight. The breweries run when you are out of town. I have just learned this. I also have pretty definite information that Griesedieck beer will flow either Thursday or Friday. You should slip back quietly but quickly as possible and watch for them. Don't neglect this.
> With love,
> HEBER.

Gus Nations repeated his former statement that he tore the letter while in a sleeping car berth, on his way from Kansas City to St. Louis, and meant to throw the fragments out of the window, but could not raise the window, so put the pieces in his handbag.

Breuer asked as to the envelope, and Nations said he had torn it and put the fragments in his bag also, but had not saved them. As to the letter, he said, "it occurred to me after seeing an article in the Post-Dispatch several days later," that he might desire the information, and he took the pieces from the bag and pasted them up. It did not occur to him, he said, that the envelope would be of value.

Nations was asked whether he was watching breweries other than Griesedieck's, and he told of two raids on breweries in Northern Missouri, made by him. Telling of the Griesedieck raid, Nations said he could not say which of his men was first to enter the place, as his main concern was to see that no one got out, and that about 40 arrests were made. The raid, he said, was "the fulfillment of a long desire."

$2,000,000 MORE FOR ARMY

House Increases Outlay for Housing Program by That Amount.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The House today unanimously approved an amendment to the War Department supply bill, increasing the outlay for the army housing program from $14,000,000 to $16,000,000.

The amendment offered by Congressman Snell (Rep.), New York, increases the total amount provided in the bill for the War Department to $456,000,000. Snell said his proposal would bring the amount available for the army housing program up to the level of Budget Bureau estimates. He recommended the increase as being in line with the move to press public construction projects.

ALLEGED LAZARUS HEIR SEEKS COURT ORDER

Charges Old Photographs Were Obtained by Detective Through Fraud.

Federal Judge Faris will rule tomorrow on the application of Silas A. Lazarus of Corvallis, Ore., for the appointment of a commissioner to examine H. C. Thatcher, private detective of Texarkana, Ark., who, it is charged, obtained possession of old photographs which Lazarus asserts he needs to support his assertion that he is an illegitimate son of the late Sam Lazarus, St. Louis capitalist and railroad director.

Silas Lazarus, a sprinkling wagon driver, sued in July, 1928, for a one-third interest in the $3,000,000 estate which Sam Lazarus left to his widow and daughter when he died March 5, 1926.

A supplementary petition, filed yesterday by Walter Burch, St. Louis attorney for Silas Lazarus, alleged that Thatcher, in April, 1928, representing himself as the agent of Silas Lazarus, called on Mrs. Margaret Paxson at Sherman, Tex., and persuaded her to surrender to him two infant photographs of Silas and two photographs of his mother, taken at or about the time of her alleged association with Sam Lazarus.

Attorney Burch told the court he had reason to believe that Thatcher was in the employ of the widow of Sam Lazarus, Mrs. Lily M. Lazarus. He asked for an immediate order, stating that he had been informed by telegraph that Thatcher was preparing to leave Texarkana.

CHICAGO THEATRICAL BOOKER TOOK OWN LIFE, JURY DECIDES

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—A Coroner's jury, investigating the death today of Blair McElroy, partner in the Fitzpatrick - McElroy Theatrical Booking Agency, returned a verdict of suicide because of ill health. He shot himself at the home of his partner's aunt. McElroy, reputed to have been worth $6,000,000, left insurance said to total $300,000.

He had been shot through the mouth and left a farewell note to Kenneth Fitzpatrick, the partner, saying:

"Take the insurance and pay Blue Island and Pebby. They have both been too good to us to pass them by. Goodby."

Police say it was indicated Blue Island meant the Blue Island Trust and Savings Bank in which McElroy was a director and that "Pebby," was F. W. Pebby, president of the Union Banking Co. of St. Joseph, Mich.

FUNDS FOR NEW REFORMATORY TO BE READY SOON

Governor Announces Intermediate Institution for First Offenders Will Be Built in 1930.

PRISON CONGESTION WILL BE RELIEVED

1927 Legislature Authorized Construction but the Money Has Not Been Available Before.

By the Jefferson City Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Jan. 11.—Construction of an intermediate reformatory in Missouri, for first offenders, under an enabling act passed by the 1927 Legislature, likely will be started within a few months, Gov. Caulfield announced today. An effort will be made to have at least part of the reformatory ready for use by the end of the year.

The law authorizing the additional penal institution has been in effect for more than two years, but no official move to begin construction has been made heretofore, because funds have not been available.

Caulfield said he expected to be in a position soon to release part or all of the $750,000 appropriation made for the reformatory by the 1929 Legislature. The Governor now is waiting on a final financial report from the State Auditor before determining the amount of the first release of funds for the new institution.

Construction of the intermediate reformatory will aid in reducing congestion in the Missouri penitentiary, which now has a convict population of approximately 4000, although it was built to house approximately 2600 convicts.

Part of General Bill.

The Governor recently indicated his intention to take early action on the reformatory project, in his announcement that he would not call a special session of the Legislature to consider recommendaitons of the State Survey Commission, on needs of the state schools and institutions, but would place them before the next regular session of the Legislature in 1931. Today he announced the project would be started as soon as possible.

The $750,000 appropriation for the reformatory by the 1929 Legislature was included in a general building appropriation bill, which provided that no appropriation item in the bill should be available until the Governor had determined that state revenues were sufficient to permit release of the money.

The intermediate reformatory act provides for establishment of an intermediate reformatory, separate from the penitentiary here and the boys' reformatory at Boonville, for first offenders who were between the ages of 17 and 25 years when convicted.

May Transfer Inmates.

Control of the institution will be in the hands of the State Penal Board, which is authorized to acquire a tract of land of not to exceed 600 acres as a site. One plan suggested is to establish the institution near Jefferson City, on State prison farm land already owned by the State. The Governor said the terms of the act would permit construction of the institution on one of the prison farms and eliminate necessity of buying additional land.

The board would have power to transfer inmates from the reformatory to the penitentiary, if their conduct was not good. One provision of the law would make inmates of the reformatory eligible for parole only after they served seven-twelfths of the sentence imposed. A move may be made in the next Legislature to amend this requirement because of the limitation it places on the parole power.

One section of the bill creates a parole board to be made up of the reformatory superintendent, the Attorney-General and the Parole Commissioner of the State Penal Board. Only reformatory officers and employes would be permitted to appear on behalf of parole applicants, eliminating the practice now prevailing at the penitentiary of convicts employing attorneys to seek paroles.

NEGRO IS SHOT BY DEPUTY

Alleged to Have Resisted Arrest After Fight in Dice Game.

When W. M. Ewing, Negro Deputy Constable of St. Ferdinand Township, heard sounds of a quarrel in a shack at Lix and Second streets, Kinloch Park, last night, he entered and found three Negroes, two of them had drawn knives, arguing over a dice game.

Hence Head, a porter of Kinloch Park, was shot in the left arm by Ewing when he resisted arrest. Grant McDaniels, a porter, and Archie Johnson, a chauffeur, also of Kinloch Park, displayed cuts of the face. All three were arrested.

FUNDS FOR NEW REFORMATORY TO BE READY SOON

Governor Announces Intermediate Institution for First Offenders Will Be Built in 1930.

PRISON CONGESTION WILL BE RELIEVED

1927 Legislature Authorized Construction but the Money Has Not Been Available Before.

By the Jefferson City Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Jan. 11.—Construction of an intermediate reformatory in Missouri, for first offenders, under an enabling act passed by the 1927 Legislature, likely will be started within a few months, Gov. Caulfield announced today. An effort will be made to have at least part of the reformatory ready for use by the end of the year.

The law authorizing the additional penal institution has been in effect for more than two years, but no official move to begin construction has been made heretofore, because funds have not been available.

Caulfield said he expected to be in a position soon to release part or all of the $750,000 appropriation made for the reformatory by the 1929 Legislature. The Governor now is waiting on a final financial report from the State Auditor before determining the amount of the first release of funds for the new institution.

Construction of the intermediate reformatory will aid in reducing congestion in the Missouri penitentiary, which now has a convict population of approximately 4000, although it was built to house approximately 2600 convicts.

Part of General Bill.

The Governor recently indicated his intention to take early action on the reformatory project, in his announcement that he would not call a special session of the Legislature to consider recommendations of the State Survey Commission, on needs of the state schools and institutions, but would place them before the next regular session of the Legislature in 1931. Today he announced the project would be started as soon as possible.

The $750,000 appropriation for the reformatory by the 1929 Legislature was included in a general building appropriation bill, which provided that no appropriation item in the bill should be available until the Governor had determined that state revenues were sufficient to permit release of the money.

The intermediate reformatory act provides for establishment of an intermediate reformatory, separate from the penitentiary here and the boys' reformatory at Boonville, for first offenders who were between the ages of 17 and 25 years when convicted.

May Transfer Inmates.

Control of the institution will be in the hands of the State Penal Board, which is authorized to acquire a tract of land of not to exceed 600 acres as a site. One plan suggested is to establish the institution near Jefferson City, on State prison farm land already owned by the State. The Governor said the terms of the act would permit construction of the institution on one of the prison farms and eliminate necessity of buying additional land.

The board would have power to transfer inmates from the reformatory to the penitentiary, if their conduct was not good. One provision of the law would make inmates of the reformatory eligible for parole only after they served seven-twelfths of the sentence imposed. A move may be made in the next Legislature to amend this requirement because of the limitation it places on the parole power.

One section of the bill creates a parole board to be made up of the reformatory superintendent, the Attorney-General and the Parole Commissioner of the State Penal Board. Only reformatory officers and employes would be permitted to appear on behalf of parole applicants, eliminating the practice now prevailing at the penitentiary of convicts employing attorneys to seek paroles.

NEGRO IS SHOT BY DEPUTY

Alleged to Have Resisted Arrest After Fight in Dice Game.

When W. M. Ewing, Negro Deputy Constable of St. Ferdinand Township, heard sounds of a quarrel in a shack at Lix and Second streets, Kinloch Park, last night, he entered and found three Negroes, two of them had drawn knives, arguing over a dice game.

Hence Head, a porter of Kinloch Park, was shot in the left arm by Ewing when he resisted arrest. Grant McDaniels, a porter, and Archie Johnson, a chauffeur, also of Kinloch Park, displayed cuts of the face. All three were arrested.

ORCHID SHOW OPENS AT SHAW'S GARDEN TODAY

Modernisitic Setting Provided for Varied Display of Tropical Plants

Supt. Pring was an amazed though not unhappy man. He stood back, head tilted quizzically, and watched Floriculturist Kohl, designer of Shaw's Garden shows, arrange settings and place plants for the orchid show, opening today in the Floral Display House.

"Just to remember"—he paused, as Kohl stepped hurriedly to a tiny model, potted figures on paper, and went back to his display. "Just to think of ripping these identical orchids out of the trees in the jungle!"

There was a contrast. These orchids bade forewell to the jungle when they entered that show. Savagery was forsaken. Sophistication triumphed in the first modernistic flower show ever produced, so far as known at the garden.

A conventional arrangement of Alpine violets and baby primroses occupies the foreground of the display house. But visitors almost overlook it as they face the striking black and silver entrance into an enchanted chamber of orchids.

Modernist Designs.

Only the flowers look like anything ever seen here previously in a similar show. Stands and not mere flower stands, but massed polygons; walls are a study in diamonds and triangles and quadrangles. Niches are not mere recesses in a wall, but shadow-boxes; windows that might have come straight from a Bakst stage set for "The Sunken Bell."

And the most striking thing about it, after the moment of newness, is that it does not appropriate all attention. After the moment of newness, one can look at the orchids, and find that the setting enhances their loveliness. The fact is that the whole scene focuses on green banks of slipper orchids, white and mauve tiers of Laelias and Tulipans.

Many Rare Blossoms.

The slipper orchids this year—for the first time since Pring brought back thousands of showy Cattleyas, such as the Tulipans, from his orchid hunt in the Andes—are the center of the show. There is a plentitude of rarities. One of them blooms now for the first time in five years, and the first time for any show. With all the others, it was bequeathed as a baby plant by the late D. S. Brown of Kirkwood—the gift that set the garden on the path to its present eminence in the orchid world. Carefully nurtured, it bloomed once—enough to show that it was an albino or yellow variation of the ordinarily chocolate Harrisianum—the only one in this country. And then it bloomed no more.

Care was redoubled in the special orchid houses at Grays Summit, and for this show, in the place of the single struggling flower that bloomed five years ago, it bears three luxuriant blossoms. Beside it is a yellow lady slipper that Mr. Brown hybridized himself and named it "Sidney Brown" for his daughter.

EX-GOV. SMITH IN COLLISION

Boat in Which He Is Passenger Strikes Photographers' Craft.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Jan. 11.—Carrying a party to the opening of the millionaires' clubhouse at Cocolobo Cay, the boat on which former Gov. Alfred E. Smith was a passenger collided with another craft. Some passengers on both boats were thrown to the decks.

Newspaper men and photographers, riding in a faster boat than that in which Smith was traveling, passed his craft to get pictures of him. Their boat was struck by that on which the former Governor was riding.

PICTURE BY REYNOLDS AT CITY ART MUSEUM

Portrait of Mrs. Ogilvie Purchased by Parsons Fund for $20,000.

The portrait of Mrs. Charles Ogilvie by Sir Joshua Reynolds, purchased in New York for $20,000, is on display today in the Parsons gallery in the southeast corner of the City Art Museum in Forest Park. Artists describe it as an outstanding example of Reynolds' mastery at the zenith of his career.

This was the first acquisition made in recent years with the income of the $75,000 fund left by Charles Parsons, banker and connoisseur, to maintain and enlarge his remarkable collection. The trustees have made infrequent and notable purchases, rather than accumulate inferior works.

The collection was left, at Parsons' death in 1905, to his nephew, Charles Parsons Pettus, for his life-time, thereafter to go to Washington University. Pettus was fatally injured in a fall from a horse in 1923, and the university desiring the public to have full benefit of the collection by suitable display, gave custody to the museum.

Among its 84 paintings, of which a full third are by recognized masters of the art, is a Reynolds portrait of Sir James Esdail, Lord Mayor of London, in high colors and pompous dress contrasting to the cool simplicity of the portrait of Mrs. Ogilvie.

The young woman of the portrait wears a blue velvet cloak with a narrow ermine collar. Her hair and eyes are brown, her face distinguished by a clear pallor. She was married in 1762, the year this portrait and one of her husband were painted. to the younger son of James Ogilvie of Aberdeenshire. Her father was James Michie, Chief Justice of the Colony of South Carolina.

"The portrait is an exceptionally fine example of the Reynolds' style, and its acquisition was in harmony with Mr. Parsons' ideas of collecting," said Louis La Beaume, architect, a trustee of the Parsons fund. "Reynolds painted it when he was about 40 years old, at the very height of his career."

Purchase was made, through a dealer, from the collection of John Charles Matthias Ogilvie Forbes of Boyndlie House, Frazerburg, Aberdeenshire. The only other acquisitions by the Parsons trust since the collection has been in custody of the museum, were two paintings, by Jacob Cuyp and Lorenzo Lotti, acquired several years ago. The trustees, besides Le Beaume, are W. K. Bixby, Dr. Malvern B. Clopton and Curator Charles P. Davis of the museum.

HUNT FOR DRIVER OF AUTO WHICH KILLED WOMAN

Three Men in Car Which Sped On After Hitting Mrs Anna Queensen at Broadway and Blow.

Mrs. Anna Queensen, 61 years old, 7107A Virginia avenue, was killed early yesterday when struck at Broadway and Blow street by an automobile occupied by three men, who did not stop.

Mrs. Queensen, a widow, was employed as a laundress at the Masonic Home, 5351 Delmar boulevard, and was on her way to work. She was crossing Broadway from the west to board a street car when struck and dragged 30 feet by a coupe, which was driven south at high speed, according to witnesses.

The driver continued on without reducing his speed and witnesses, who described the car as a Pontiac coupe, were unable to obtain the license number.

Mrs. Queensen was dead when picked up. Examination disclosed that she had suffered fractures of the ribs and left leg and internal injuries.

A search is being made for the driver.

Mrs. Laura Lynch, 2323 St. Louis avenue, and her 12-year-old daughter, Alice, were knocked down by a truck being driven west in St. Louis avenue at Twenty-second street at 5:30 p. m. Mrs. Lynch suffered a possible skull fracture, a fractured hand and abrasions, while her daughter's injuries consisted of a broken finger and abrasions. The truck driver, Forrest Beller, 2249 South Jefferson avenue, was arrested, charged with careless driving.

REPORTS ROBBERS CHAINED HIM TO WHEEL OF AUTO

Man, on Way to Visit Fiancee, Says $305 Was Taken by Men Who Got Into His Car.

Two men, who got in his machine when he stopped to permit a street car to pass at Ninth street and Cass avenue, drove him to Broadway and Chestnut, robbed him of $305 and chained his right hand to the steering wheel, William Baldasare, 25-year-old laborer, of Granite City, reported to police last night.

Baldasare hailed Probationary Patrolman Rooney of Central District at Ninth and Chestnut streets, and they drove to the Central district garage where the chain was filed off.

Baldasare told police that one of the men took the wheel and the other pressed a revolver against his ribs, warning him not to cry out. He said the money taken represented his savings and that he was on his way to call on his fiancee on the 2300 block of Nebraska avenue.

He gave his address as 2165 Monroe avenue, Granite City.

Two men who robbed Elmer Carlson, manager of Kissell-Skiles, Inc., 3617 Washington boulevard, at 10:30 o'clock last night fled in a Ford sedan, one of the drive-yourself cars owned by the company.

In a holdup of the grocery of Mrs. Elizabeth Good, 925 Geyer avenue, an armed robber escaped with $147.

Mike Levitt, proprietor of a grocery store at 2201 Clark avenue, was robbed of $100 by an armed Negro as he was closing the place.

George Edison, proprietor of a clothing store at 212 North Jefferson avenue, and William Markovich, a clerk, were held up in the store at 11 o'clock last night by an armed Negro, who took $295 from the cash register and escaped on foot.

STIMSON OPPOSES GETTING LEAGUE'S O K ON NAVY PACT

sive action to keep itself in the forefront of the disarmament picture. At the meeting of the League Council, which opens Monday, that body, if present plans are carried out, will adopt this program:

1. Order the Security Committee to reassemble on March 11 to complete its work before the Preparatory Disarmament Commission meets, which will probably be in June.

2. Within two months after the conclusion of the London naval parley the Preparatory Disarmament Commission will reconvene and conclude its work.

3. Summon a general world disarmament conference in 1931 and completion of the League's preliminary disarmament preparations before September.

At its meeting next week, the Council will also select a special committee of 11, to consider means for closing gaps between the covenant of the League and the Kellogg pact for the outlawing of war.

Great Britain, France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Japan and Sweden will certainly be represented by high ranking officials at the Council meeting, while Canada is expected to look after North American interests. The absence of a United States representative will be the greatest obstacle inasmuch as no interpretation of the Kellogg pact is available.

France's reiterated thesis that disarmament must come under the guarantees of the league's covenant rather than under the Kellogg pact and the entrance of Spain into Mediterranean naval problems has made it even more imperative, in the opinion of officials here, that the League covenant be tightened up to superside the Kellogg pact.

Ambassador Da Leon is spending this week in Spain consulting with King Alfonso and the Spanish Government over the project for a "Mediterranean Locarno." Spain, France and Germany are determined that decisions at London shall be completely within the framework of the League and are opposed to a three-Power agreement by Great Britain, the United States and Japan.

The injection of the "freedom of the seas" question; "political guarantees in the Mediterranean," such as characterize the western front guarantees, and the Quai d'Orsay's insistence that nothing can be considered binding at London until incorporated in an "all-world disarmament treaty" concluded under the auspices of the league, complicated affairs so much that league officials are no longer optimistic over London projects.

Stimson to Be Kept in Touch With Public Opinion.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—During the progress of the London naval conference Secretary Stimson plans to keep a close watch on public opinion. The State Department has instructed attaches of several American Embassies in Europe to attend a conference in London at which a system of transmitting editorial comment and other significant information from various countries will be formulated. This matter is to be assembled daily in London together with a digest of American news and editorial opinions which will be cabled to Stimson by the State Department.

The attaches who will gather the European information have been drawn from the Embassies in Berlin, Berne, Brussels, Paris and Rome.

Comment of the Japanese press also is expected to be furnished the delegates.

Period Rooms at Museum Viewed by 1000 at Opening

Crowd Braves Rain and Slush to See Classic Beauty of English and French Furnishings.

The popularity of the new period rooms at the Art Museum was foreshadowed yesterday afternoon when more than 1000 persons braved a driving rain and deep slush underfoot to attend the formal opening. Doors to the rooms were opened at 2:30 o'clock, and from then until 6 o'clock, when the Museum was closed, an almost steady stream of visitors filed through the five rooms. Meyric R. Rogers, director of the Museum, his staff and members of the Board of Control, were kept busy escorting groups about and explaining interesting features.

The four English rooms represent the four major developments in English taste from the late sixteenth to the early nineteenth century, the so-called ages of oak, walnut, mahogany and satinwood.

The rooms are not reproductions, but have been removed from famous old English homes. The one French room, of the period of Louis XV, was taken from the Hotel de Pomponne at Paris.

The cost of assembling the rooms and equipping them with furnishings of their periods was about $250,000. Two were presented to the museum, one by Mr. and Mrs. Warner S. McCall, the other by Joseph Pulitzer, as a memorial to his first wife, Elinor Wickham Pulitzer.

"Looks Like a Palace."

The classic beauty of the rooms with their richly paneled walls, intricate carvings and finely molded ceilings did not escape the many who inspected them yesterday, and as a visitor paused at a new threshold for sweeping view of the room the remark, "My, it looks like part of a palace," was not infrequent.

The exclamation had a more literal application than most were able to guess, for the history of England's royal families touches lightly on the stories of three of the rooms.

Not so lightly on the Kempshot House room, fourth in the series. This is the only room in the group without paneled wood walls, for it was built when paneling had given way to wallpaper and carving to low relief modeling after the fashion of Adam. The wallpaper was ordered by George IV, then Prince of Wales, for the home of Lady Fitzherbert at Basingstoke. It was in this home that their morganatic marriage, later repudiated, was celebrated.

Wall Paper Preserved.

The paper, according to tradition, was designed and in part painted by Pergolesi, an Italian decorator. Its splendid state of preservation is accounted for by the fact that it is now mounted on canvas.

The Prinknash Park room, the first entered by the visitor, and likewise the first in historical sequence, is not without some link with royalty, although it is not recorded that any of England's Kings ever entered it. The room is from an ancient estate near Gloucester, and during the internal wars of the reign of Charles I, when his armies had laid seige to Gloucester, preparations were made to shelter the King at Prinknash Park. At the last moment he changed his mind and stayed at an adjoining estate.

The Prinknash Park room at the museum is known as the Justice's Room. Sir John Bridgeman, Chief Justice of Cheshire, bought Prinknash Park in 1628, and among other additions added this room, which he used as his study. Its straight severe lines, accentuated by the numerous small panels in the walls give a hint of the uncompromising character of the Justice for whom it was built. One who had suffered by one of his harsh judgments wrote an epitaph which read: clad in his clay.

"Here lies Sir John Bridgeman,
God said to the devil, 'Sirrah, take him away.'"

Built for Prince Henry.

The Charleton House room, third in the series, was taken from a famous Jacobean mansion near Greenwich, Kent, but this room, of pine paneling, was added about 1725 in the manner then current. The house was built between 1607 and 1612 for Sir Adam Newton, tutor for Prince Henry, the eldest son of James I. The fact that the royal arms were included in the decorations of the house, together with knowledge that Sir Adam was not himself endowed with an abundance of worldly goods has lent color to the theory that the house originally was intended for the residence of Prince Henry. The Prince, however, died before it was completed.

The Wingerworth Hall room is from a smaller home, and, while its associations are not so interesting as those of the others, the house from which it was taken was built by James Smith of Warwick in Derbyshire, a section of England noted for its fine examples of English domestic architecture. The spacious effect created by its broad panels gives it a dignity characteristic of the best work of the period.

The Pomponne room, being French, is in striking contrast to the others and its design is purely decorative without dependence on classic forms. Its large panels avoid monotony by curved panel heads and carving of fine delicacy. In the design of the room and in the furniture placed in it the occasional over-exuberance of the Louis XV period has been carefully avoided. Overdoor paintings set into the paneling are part of the original scheme and are said to be the work of Charles Antoine Coypel.

BLIND PRETZEL VENDER LEAVES $7500 ESTATE

Marzell Kammerer, Supposedly Penniless, Wills $500 for Blind, $1300 to Churches.

When Marzell Kammerer, 77-year-old blind pretzel vender, known to many residents of South St. Louis, died of infirmities of age Jan. 1, he was thought penniless.

Actually he had $7500 cash in banks, it was disclosed yesterday by his attorney, Albert Appelbaum, with the filing of his will leaving the money to charities and friends. He had lived frugally and never had married. Blind since his early years, he had managed to earn his own living and put aside savings from his door-to-door sales of pretzels.

He willed $500 to Archbishop Glennon to help the needy blind, $1300 to three Catholic churches—$500 to St. Mary's and $400 each to Our Lady of Sorrows' and St. Cecelia's—and the residue of the estate, after deduction of $3000 in specific bequests, to the Little Sisters of the Poor.

He provided $400 for his funeral expenses and $100 for a gravestone. To his closest friends, the Borgel family, at 4950 Eichelberger avenue, he willed $2500, as follows: Lillian Borgel, $1200; Clara Borgel, $500; Leona, Joseph, Edward and Agnes Borgel, $200 each. He had no surviving relatives.

400 CHILDREN CARED FOR AT SHRINERS' HOSPITAL

More than 400 crippled children were treated at Shriners' Hospital last year and discharged with their deformities corrected in so far as medical science was able to accomplish it. At the end of the year there were 109 children in the institution.

All those treated there are children of parents unable to pay for the service, the hospital, and eight similar institutions in the country, being supported by an annual tax on members of the Shrine.

DILL CRITICISES DISTRIBUTION OF RADIO FACILITIES

Senator Declares Commission Has Not Carried Out Provision for Equal Facilities Between the Zones

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—An attack against the distribution of radio facilities by the Federal Radio Commission was made today before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee by Senator Dill, (Dem.), Washington, author of the Federal Radio Act.

While the committee was questioning Harold A. La Fount, member of the Radio Commission, Dill asserted that the commission had not carried out the provisions of the Davis amendment to the radio act, which provides for equality of radio facilities between each of the five zones in the United States.

La Fount replied that he thought the commission had followed the law almost to the letter with the exception of providing equality of power between the zones.

The commissioner added that it was "physically impossible to adhere to the law strictly without 'ruining reception.'"

Lafount explained that the fifth zone in the West consists of two-fifths of the area in the United States, while the first zone in the East is smaller than the single State of Montana in the fifth zone.

The number of stations in the first zone could not be equal to the number needed in the fifth zone without ruining reception, Lafount said.

Dill answered that he did not think the Davis amendment was entirely satisfactory, but said he saw no chance of repealing it unless something better were offered.

Lafount asserted that the problems of radio were changing from day to day and that several years possibly would be required to reach a satisfactory solution of the difficulties.

At an executive session after the hearing the committee adopted a resolution calling on the Federal Power Commission for all memoranda and opinions prepared since June 1, 1929, by counsel and the chief accountant of the commission for use by the committee in its consideration of the Couzens bill, which would consolidate control of communications.

PLANES SEARCH WIDE AREA FOR MISSING ALTITUDE FLYERS

Two Men, Who Took Up Six-Place Cabin Machine, Believed to Have Lost Bearings.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—With only one tangible clew—that a heavy-motored airplane apparently lost in the fog has passed over an airport in Connecticut—more than three dozen planes scoured a wide area today in quest of two flyers who went up on an altitude flight yesterday and did not return.

The two men, Daniel Marra and William Kirkpatrick, were believed to have been caught by a cross wind and, hampered by poor visibility, to have lost their bearings. They took off from Farmingdale, N. Y., yesterday morning to determine the altitude capacity of a six-place cabin monoplane owned by the Fairchild Airplane Manufacturing Corporation, a unit of the Aviation Corporation.

They had expected their flight to require only an hour or two, but the afternoon passed and there was no word of them. Last night the Aviation Corporation sent out a radio appeal to ships along the coast, but without result.

This afternoon word was received of a plane that passed over the airport at Bethany, Conn., yesterday morning when the fog ceiling was only about 100 feet high.

Plane to Supplant Dogs At Alaskan Missions

BROTHER G. J. FELTES.

Only Jesuit Aviator on Way to New York to Get Craft to Make Journeys Between Missions in North.

Jesuit missionaries in Alaska who have trudged behind dog teams for weeks while traveling between scattered missions are soon to abandon that tedious method of travel and will speed through the clouds to cover in an hour as much ground as they are now able to traverse in a week.

An airplane has been ordered for their regular use. The man who is to fly it, Brother George J. Feltes, S. J., of St. Ignatius College, San Francisco, left St. Louis for New York yesterday after visiting St. Louis University for a few days. He will select a plane in New York and fly it back to San Francisco before taking it to Alaska.

Brother Feltes, the only Jesuit air pilot, regards his coming adventure lightly and refuses to admit that it presents any unusual hazards. "There are airplanes in commercial service in Alaska now," he says, "and our missionaries in emergencies have chartered them. Planes have taken food to isolated missions and have taken men sick or injured to places where medical treatment was available.

"The airplane has been a lifesaver in the North. Two of our missionaries have been frozen to death on the trail within the last five years. That could never have happened if they had been able to travel by airplane.

Three Weeks Cut to Three Hours.

The missionaries' airplane will be stationed at Holy Cross, 150 miles inland on the Yukon River. From there Brother Feltes will fly to the eight outlying Jesuit missions, with supplies or with missionaries being transferred to new posts. The longest trip will be to Fairbanks, 350 miles farther inland than Holy Cross. Missionaries usually spend three weeks on the trail in making that trip. With the airplane it can be completed in three and one-half hours.

Brother Feltes, although he is only 32 years old, has been a Jesuit for 14 years. His interest in automobile mechanics won him the assignment to become the Alaskan pilot, as the pilot must be the mechanic, also.

He has never been in Alaska, and before last July 16, had never been in an airplane. On that date he began taking instruction at Alameda airport, across the bay from San Francisco, and within six weeks had obtained his private flyer's license. Last Oct. 31 his record of 55 hours of solo flight gained him a limited commercial pilot's license and he expects that the 200 hours necessary to obtain a transport license will be achieved soon after he acquires the new plane.

First Long Flight to Come.

It has not been definitely selected but probably will be a single motored amphibian biplane with an enclosed cabin accommodating four passengers. The trip back to San Francisco will be Brother Feltes' first extended flight, although he has made one flight between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

His present journey he is making by train, "the safe and slow way." "Air travel," he insists, is safer than driving an automobile. You are never safe when you're on the ground. A piece of ice slid off the University roof and nearly hit me when I arrived here. But hardly anybody gets hurt in the air." Smiling, he added the after thought: "They do get hurt sometimes, though, when they try to come down."

U. S. PASSPORT STAMP STOLEN, 40 POLES HELD

Missing Instrument Used in Forgery of Papers for Admission to America.

By the Associated Press.

WARSAW, Poland, Jan. 11.—More than 40 persons are held in prison here as a consequence of investigation of the theft three weeks ago of an American Consulate official stamp which was used to visa forged passport for entrance into America. Those held include several subordinate employes of the Consulate who are alleged to have dealt with the emigrants through outsiders, who also have been arrested.

There is little doubt that several hundred persons have entered the United States by means of these false visas, which were sold at prices ranging from $500 to $700 each, and in exceptional instances $1500. The investigation continues as it seems even others have been involved in the conspiracy.

AMERICAN AUTO COMPANY TO BUILD BODIES IN AUSTRALIA

SAYS HE WROTE SECRET BRITISH PAPER AS SATIRE

"A Gordon Brown and Company."

Shearer testified before the committee that when he turned the document over to the Navy Department, they made photostatic copies of it and the name of Sir William Wiseman was then signed to it.

Chairman Shortridge, of the Senate committee, put into the record today a telegram from Wiseman denying any knowledge of the document. He is now in New York.

The 29-page pamphlet began with an analysis of the "American mentality on which hostility to England depended" and concluded with the suggestion that "the day prophesied by Mr. Carnegie is near at hand, the day when the American colonies will be in all things one with the motherland, one and indivisible."

"An Air of Authenticity."

The document was unsigned and Dr. Maloney explained that the inference was left that it was written by Wiseman, in order to "give it an air of authenticity."

"I analyzed the American mentality on which hostility to England depended," the pamphlet said, "and found it composed chiefly of covetousness, pride, fear and traditional ignorance. I then suggested the formation here under Sir Gilbert Parker of propaganda bureaus to modify the prevailing ignorance, and requested power to apply adequate social and financial pressure in order to satisfy native American ambition and to cater to the weaknesses which fed it."

After many references and suggestions for flattering the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, the document proposed:

"A further suggestion, namely, that a playing card should be called, the President, and should carry his picture, ranking in play above the ace, King and Queen, a substitute for the Joker—I mention but do not advocate."

The "Document" also proposed that the first session of the League of Nations be held in Washington.

"Power Should Be Exalted."

"This will convince these simple people," the report continued, "that they are the League and that its power resides in them. Their pride in this power should be exalted."

There was another suggestion that "the approaching July 4 be robbed both of its insult to us and its power to obstruct our purpose, by a pompous celebration in England."

"t might be called America's day, and its keynote might be 'get together.' The President must be given credit for the idea. The London dailies might be instructed as to their editorial and news policy on that day. There could be a special America day issue of the London Times to which Her Majesty, the Queen, and Mrs. Wilson, Sir James Gerard, Sir John Pershing, Sir William Sims, and other American Knights might contribute. Mr. Taft might write an article to show that the Carnegie League to Enforce Peace—which is looked upon here as a domestic organization—is the parent body of the League of Nations. Mr. Wickersham and our other lawyers could show what American liberty owes to the English legal system. Senator King and our other legislators could cite from President Wilson's work on Government to show that the parliamentary system is superior to the Congressional and that American legislative independence is based on revolution of 1688."

The Senate Committee adjourned indefinitely.

POPE SAYS CHURCH HAS FIRST RIGHT TO EDUCATE CHILD

Family Comes Next and State Last in This Regard, Pius XI Declares in New Encyclical.

By the Associated Press.

VATICAN CITY, Jan. 11.—Pope Pius today issued a new encyclical on the education of children in which he said that the church had the first share, the family the next and the state the last in juvenile education.

For the first time in the history of the papacy, an encyclical was issued in Italian and it will be issued in translation into other modern languages.

The encyclical was devoted entirely to the Christian education of youth. In it the Pontiff summarized the supreme principle of the education of youth and the necessity of applying new pedagogic theories and practical modern methods to that of the Catholic principle.

The encyclical emphasized the excellence of Christian education which must be taken care of in order to secure its perfection. Outlining the principal points in Christian education, the encyclical said that it belongs to the churches in a certain measure, to the family in another and to the state in still another.

In the encyclical Pope Pius said that the state must avoid any excess concerning the physical and military education of children. In general the temporal power—meaning the state—must not conflict with the spiritual in the same way that reason must not conflict with faith. But there must be scientific liberty together with didactic liberty.

The encyclical asserted that the church had a divine mandate over the education of children joined with the infallible mission entrusted to the church. Therefore the church had a leading part in the education of children, sharing with the family which comes before the state. To the state is reserved the complementary work of education with the church and family without, however, taking the place of either the church or family in the work they are entitled to do.

The encyclical strongly opposed pedagogic naturalism and was especially vigorous against so-called sexual education and co-education.

The Pope said that the social atmosphere of the school could be organized by the state but in so doing the state must avoid damage caused by lay schools and by neutral schools as well as by schools in countries having various religions.

Schools ought to be organized to form the true Christian, namely the true man of character enlightened by faith and the example of Jesus Christ, that is to say the man most perfect and most useful to society.

The encyclical ended by recalling the words of St. Augustine as to the educative mission of the church.

Today's was the third encyclical in a month.

Pope Pius, to support his contention that the family had a right to supervise the education of its children, cited a decision of the United States Supreme Court on a school case in Oregon, June 1, 1925.

He quoted part of the text of the finding in the encyclical and credited it to the Supreme Court in a footnote.

Among the perils for adolescent children, Pope Pius mentioned cheap pornographic books, certain kinds of movies, and "radiophonic auditions which multiply and facilitate, if one may say so, all sorts of reading, as the cinema does all sorts of spectacles.'"

He said that movies and the radio, which might be of great utility in instruction and education, were "too often subordinated to incentives to evil passions and to avidity for gain."

MORGAN PARTNER'S DAUGHTER IN OPERA

Eleanor Steele to Make Debut in Brooklyn Production of "The Magic Flute."

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Miss Eleanor Steele, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Steele of Westbury, L. I., is to seek a career in opera. She will make her debut Jan. 16, in Brooklyn's Little Theater Opera Company's presentation, "The Magic Flute."

Miss Steele whose father is one of the partners of J. P. Morgan, returned home last fall for a visit with her family after living in Paris 18 years. Though she has studied music and even appeared in concerts and operas abroad she did not intend at this time to do anything about furthering her career. A casual meeting with the director of the Brooklyn company at a luncheon, however, changed her plans. She decided to remain in this country for the winter at least and to appear with the company.

Miss Steele is particularly interested in seeing America develop opera of an intimate sort. She will sing the role of the leading lady in the first intimate version of Mozart's opera that has been essayed in the country. "The Magic Flute," originally written to amuse the guests of a Viennese Prince, has been presented many times by the Metropolitan as a spectacle of major proportions, but will be seen in the Brooklyn presentation in something of the intimacy which surrounded the original performance 97 years ago.

Miss Steele is a graduate of Miss Chapin's School. In 1910 she was married to Count Jean De La Grebe and went to Paris to live. Later she was divorced and married Dr. Louis Dubonesset. For the last five years she has devoted herself to her music.

She will sing here under the name of Ellen Maurey, the first part of the name coming from her maternal great-aunt, Ellen Herndon, whose soprano voice was noted shortly after the Civil War. Maurey is her mother's family name.

$1,000,000 FIRM TO USE CORNSTALKS IN MANUFACTURE

Wall Board to Be First Product, Based on Iowa State College Process.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—Research suggested by former Gov. Frank O. Lowden and carried on for the last three years, has culminated in a $1,000,000 closed corporation formed to develop industrial uses of cornstalks.

The organization, to be known as National Corn Stalks Processes, Inc., already is operating a plant at Dubuque, Ia., with a daily capacity of 100,000 square feet of insulating wall board. The company pays $10 a ton for cornstalks baled and delivered, a price which, allowing for labor, hauling and freight, provides approximately $3 a ton to the farmer for stalks standing in the field, officers said.

The study of commercial uses for cornstalk products was carried on by Burton F. and George N. Peek of Moline, Ill., in association with Chester C. Davis and Byron Hunicke of Chicago and Willis S. Brown, Belvidere, Ill. The investigation disclosed that practical processes for the manufacture of wall board and other materials had been developed at Iowa State College, Ames, under the direction of Dr. O. R. Sweeney, head of the chemical engineering department. The patents and processes owned by the college will be used by the new corporation, which has retained Dr. Sweeney as consulting engineer. The college, under its agreement with the 19 underwriters, will supervise the developmnt of the products past the experimental stages. Besides wall board, many other products may be manufactured, such as machine gears, pressed board and imitation wood.

IMPORTERS AT LOBBY INQUIRY

Eight Summoned to Appear Before Senate Body This Week.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Eight representatives of the importing industry were summoned today by the Senate Lobby Committee to appear next week in connection with the investigation into activities centering about the pending tariff bill.

The importers, all of New York City, were called to appear on Tuesday and Wednesday, along with E. R. Pickerell of the General Dye Stuff Corporation. Those called by the committee for Tuesday were Peter Fletcher, president, National Council of American Importers and Traders, Inc.; Harvey O. Lloyd, treasurer, National Council of American Importers and Traders, Inc.; Otto Fix, chairman, Toy Committee; C. T. Riotte, chairman, customs and laces group. Those called for Wednesday included Frank J. Nolan, wool fabrics group, chairman, National Council American Importers and Traders, Inc.; David Walker, chairman, Oriental goods group; J. W. Bevans, customs adviser, National Council of American Importers and Traders, Inc., and Philip Le Boutillier, vice president, National Council of American Importers and Traders, Inc.

F. H. SMITH CO. COUNSEL TO CONTEST RECEIVERSHIP

Accusation Is Made That U. S. Prosecutor Foments Civil Suits to Aid Mail Fraud Charge.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Pointing out that a similar petition for a receiver had been denied by Judge Alfred A. Wheat in Washington, attorneys for the F. H. Smith Co. announced today that the petition for an equity receiver filed here would be vigorously contested.

Seven directors of the company are under indictment in Washington charged with mail fraud in promotion and sale of securities by the company, and indictments are being sought here.

"Judge Wheat," said Frank G. Raichle of Smith counsel, "denied the motion for the appointment of a receiver, saying that it would benefit no one but the receiver and would do incalculable injury to the company and the stockholders."

A receivership also was sought in Delaware, Raichle said, but none was appointed.

Smith counsel charged that Nugent Dodds, Assistant United States Attorney-General, who presented the charges against the directors in Washington and is here seeking indictments before the New York Federal grand jury, "has been and is active in fomenting civil suits against the Smith Company for the purpose of aiding him in his prosecution of the company for alleged mail frauds."

LOAN BASIS OF WHEAT APPLIES TO 1929 CROP ONLY

S. R. McKelvie of Farm Board Says Law of Supply and Demand Will Fix Price in 1930.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Sam R. McKelvie, member of the Federal Farm Board, representing grain, reiterated today that the board did not intend to interfere with the normal law of supply and demand as affecting wheat.

McKelvie referred to a similar statement he had previously made at Topeka, Kan., and asserted that the loan basis on wheat, announced by the Farm Board Oct. 26, and the action of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation in entering the market to buy wheat from the growers, affected only this season's crop. What the board might do regarding the next wheat crop was dependent upon supply and demand, McKelvie added.

"I do not undertake to predict what next year's wheat crop in this country will be," McKelvie said. "Much of the potential wheat land remains yet to be planted. I may have said at Topeka that if all such wheat lands were planted and weather conditions were highly favorable, a crop of 900,000,000 bushels could be produced in this country. If such statements can be taken as an excuse for depressing the price, when in fact it did not influence one particle the conditions of supply and demand with reference to the present crop, it is a pretty clear indication that there is something substantially wrong with our grain marketing system. In other words, that the speculative side operates on a very whimsical basis."

Loans totaling $300,000 were granted today by the Farm Board to the National Order Buying Co. of Chicago, a division of the National Livestock Producers' Association.

CIVIL COURTS TO OCCUPY NEW BUILDING APRIL 1

Judge Rutledge Issues New Form of Writ to Be Returnable at 12th and Market.

Having been assured by city officials that the new Civil Courts Building will be ready for occupancy April 1, Presiding Judge Rutledge of the Circuit Court yesterday issued a new form of writ to be used in the Circuit Clerk's office after Jan. 18. That is the last date when suits for the February term can be filed, the next being the April term.

Judge Rutledge directed that for April term cases printed forms be prepared reading returnable in the Civil Court Building, at Eleventh, Twelfth, Market and Chestnut streets. He said yesterday it would not take more than two or three days for the courts to move from Broadway to the new building. In this period, he said, necessary papers needed in trials, as well as other files, could be moved, while old records and dead cases could be moved last.

SENATOR ROBSION TAKES OATH

Replaces Sackett of Kentucky, New Envoy to Germany.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—John M. Robsion, Republican, was sworn as Senator from Kentucky today, succeeding Frederick M. Sackett, who resigned to become Ambassador to Germany.

Gov. Sampson of Kentucky appointed Robsion, who was serving in the House, and the credentials arrived today. Senator Watson of Indiana, the Republican leader, asked for the presentation of the credentials. Senator Fess of Ohio accompanied Robsion as he walked up the aisle to the rostrum, where the oath was administered by Vice President Curtis. Robsion ended 10 years of service in the House from the Eleventh District of Kentucky yesterday to enter the Senate.

DESIGN FOR ROCKEFELLER SANTA FE MUSEUM ACCEPTED

John D. Jr. Financing Anthropological Laboratory to Be Started Next Spring.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11. — The Board of Trustees of the laboratory of anthropology at Santa Fe, N. M., announced here today that John Gaw Meem of Santa Fe had submitted the winning architectural design for the museum and laboratory. The first unit will be built next spring with funds donated by John D. Rockefeller Jr.

When all 10 units are completed laboratory facilities will be provided for the study of American Indian life, museum exhibitions, libraries, lecture halls and facilities for graduate instruction in archaeology, as well as public education in the history of America's native races. It will be on the outskirts of Santa Fe, in the heart of the cliff-dwelling area.

The announcement said the trustees wished to supplement the efforts of other scientific agencies in the Southwest, and the laboratory also would aid the welfare of surviving native races through medical and social research.

Rockefeller has donated $200,000 for the construction and equipment of the first unit and will contribute also the income from a $300,000 fund toward the laboratory's budget for five years.

RURAL GANG KILLING STORIES CALLED FALSE

Three of Four Listed as Murders Were Suicides, Boone County Prosecutor Says.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Jan. 11.—Resenting statements describing Central Missouri counties, including Audrain, Boone and Howard, as the center of gang killings, Prosecuting Attorneys Franklin E. Reagan of Boone and J. W. Buffington of Audrain County, today issued statements discrediting a dispatch in the St. Louis Star Jan. 9, and an editorial in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat under the caption: "Crime in Rural Missouri."

Reagan said none of the four killings mentioned in the St. Louis newspapers was unsolved. He added that the attempt by the Globe-Democrat editorially to compare a mythical group of "rural gangsters" in Central Missouri to the Dinty Colbeck gang in St. Louis and the Birger gang of Williamson County, Ill., was resented.

Reagan said three of the four deaths mentioned were suicides. In the only murder case mentioned he declared, William Anderson had been tried and acquitted of the murder of his father, James Anderson, near Sturgeon, Mo. That, Reagan asserted, was the nearest approach to a "gang killing mystery."

"A second killing mentioned by the Star, that of Clarence Chilton, had been established as a suicide by a deathbed statement of the youth," Reagan said. "The same is true of the death of Albert Proctor, another youth, who had made statements intimating he intended to kill himself."

Estill Allen, whose death was the fourth listed in the Star, was also a suicide, officers said. In three cases, Reagan declared, death was so obviously due to suicide that little investigation was necessary.

The Star, Reagan added also said that the night Chilton shot himself at Sturgeon, Mo., a hardware store which had previously been robbed was burned in an incendiary fire, intimating a connection between the incidents and declaring no one had been prosecuted for the robbery. Actually, he said, three men were prosecuted, one going to the State prison and two to the county jail.

The Prosecuting Attorney issued a flat denial that a grand jury adjourned "without accomplishing anything" in the investigation of the four "murders," as the Globe-Democrat editorial said, declaring that since there were no murders unsolved, there was no investigation.

The Columbia Daily Tribune denounced the Globe-Democrat editorial as one which "pulsated with assumption and economized on facts." "Its conclusion," says the Tribune, "is not only ridiculous, but impossible."

TWO DEATHS, ILLNESSES LAID TO PARROTS FEVER

Reports From Widely Scattered Points Received by Government Authorities.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11. — Reports attributing two deaths and many serious illnesses in widely scattered points to a rare disease, psittacosis, or parrot's fever, led Government health officers tonight to inquire into points of origin of infected birds with a view to recommending restriction of their importation.

Three new cases of what was thought to be psittacosis, a malady often fatal and similar to typhoid fever complicated by pneumonia, were reported today from Providence, R. I. The New York Health Commissioner was investigating two suspected cases, and four employes of a pet store in Baltimore were under observation as possible victims.

Surgeon-General Cumming said he had official reports from his own officers who diagnosed three other cases in Annapolis, Md., as parrot's disease.

The known deaths attributed to the disease, which scientists say is rarely transmitted to humans by other means than contact with parrots, although other animals have been infected, were those of Mrs. Percy Q. Williams of Toledo, and Mrs. Louise Schaffle of Baltimore. Mrs. Williams' husband is in a serious condition. A number of deaths have been attributed to the disease in Germany, and today the Government of Saxony placed a ban on shipment of the birds.

SIMMONS TO RUN AGAIN

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Senator Simmons of North Carolina, the dean of the Senate, announced today he would be a candidate for renomination on the Democratic ticket, but that he could conduct no personal campaign on account of his work here and for lack of money to finance it.

The veteran Democratic Senator, who refused to support the candidacy in the last election of Alfred E. Smith for the Presidency, has been given notice of opposition in the candidacy of J. W. Bailey. "I enter this, my last primary contest," said Simmons, "promising only consecrated service, guided and directed by conscientious devotion to duty, and earnestly indulging the hope that nothing may occur in this campaign which might create or revive division or discord in the ranks of the Democratic party in North Carolina. "I have been in active political life for the past 40-odd years. My record during those years is an open book."

Czar's Palace Is Turned Into Museum by Soviet

Communists Seek to Show the Masses the Luxury and Extravagance of Bygone Regime.

By the Associated Press.

MOSCOW, Jan. 11.—Establishment of museums, one of the chief fetishes of the soviets, continues in all parts of the union.

Palaces, churches, synagogues and other structural relics of the czarist regime are constantly being dedicated to education of the present day proletariat. They usually contain treasures and art objects intact, in order to show the masses the luxury and extravagance in which the aristocrats of the bygone era lived.

Incidentally the government, in its fight against religion closed more than 450 religious institutions in 1929. These included churches, monasteries, mosques and synagogues but the Anti-Religious Society estimates that there are still 50,000 churches open in the union. The closed institutions have been made over into schools, homes, clubs, hospitals, libraries or museums.

In this last category are included the $11,000,000 cathedral of St. Isaac and the Kazan cathedral, one of the richest in old Russia, both in Leningrad; the Church of the Redeemer, built at a cost of $7,000,000 to celebrate the deliverance of Moscow from Napoleon, and the Petchorsky monastery in Kiev, an eleventh century structure which was reputed to be the oldest religious edifice in Russia.

Palace Now Museum.

Another late addition to the museum list is the palace in Leningrad of Prince Yusupoff, in the basement of which the notorious monk Gregory Rasputin was shot to death. A part of this palace is set aside for a workers' center.

The palace contains millions of dollars worth of rare paintings, tapestries, bronzes, sculptures and furniture. Whatever hopes their owner may have had of getting any of these treasures to his present home in Paris, have been squelched by the decree making his home and furnishings a national possession.

Another Leningrad museum of evil report is the former fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul on the banks of the Neva. It is stripped bare, a condition which adds somberness to the tales of soviet guides concerning the manner in which political prisoners of the czars were allowed to rot in its gloomy dungeons.

Then there is the royal palace in the suburb of Tsarskoe-Seloe, just as Czar Nicholas and his wife and children left it. The ikons which the czarina worshiped under the tutelage of Rasputin, the dolls and miniature furniture of the princesses and the American Teddy bear and toboggan slide with which the heir apparent amused himself, are still where they were that night in August, 1917, when the royal family departed by the rear portals of their home.

Then if one has time and inclination he can travel eastward into Siberia and visit another museum, the most tragic of all. It is the two-story house in Ekaterinburg in which Emperor Nicholas, his wife and four children were murdered. For a fee of 10 cents visitors may even enter a basement room and see upon the walls and floor the dull red stains left by the bullets and bayonets that killed the rulers of old Russia.

AUSTRALIAN COMPULSORY ARMY TRAINING ABOLISHED

Labor Government Substitutes Voluntary Militia System; Air Force Encouraged.

By the Associated Press.

CANBERRA, Australia, Jan. 11.—Compulsory military training, which has been the keystone of Australian defense for nearly 20 years, has been abolished as one of the first acts of the new Labor party government.

A voluntary militia system is being substituted. The Government is giving special encouragement to the air force which, because of Austria's tremendous coast line, is regarded as of supreme importance.

The system was introduced by the first Federal Labor Government when it came into power 20 years ago. Andrew Fisher, Prime Minister of that Cabinet, was responsible for it, and was loudly acclaimed for having hit upon an efficient and economical system.

But about midway of the great war the Labor Government gave place to a coalition headed by W. M. Hughes. The latter, faced with a serious shortage in recruiting for the Australian forces in France and elsewhere, moved to introduce conscription, declaring it to be a logical corollary of compulsory training.

Labor, never, as a party, an enthusiastic supporter of Australian participiation in the war, was at once aflame with indignation and hostility. A referendum on the subject was held, with Labor winning a bitter campaign. Again more than a year later when there was another perilous shortage of troops at the front, Hughes held another referendum on the subject. Once more Labor's hostility defeated conscription.

PROMINENT CANADIAN BROKERS HELD IN STOCK DEAL CHARGES

Arrest of Solloway-Mills Partners Follows Inquiry by Alberta Attorney-General.

By the Associated Press.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Jan. 11.—Partners in the Dominion-wide brokerage house of Solloway-Mills Ltd. were held here and in Toronto today on request of the Alberta Attorney-General, following an investigation of mining stock and oil stock transactions of the firm.

Isaac W. C. Solloway, senior member of the firm, which has offices throughout Canada and in several cities of the United States, was detained by police at his hotel here awaiting arrival of a formal warrant which has been issued by Alberta police. Harkey Mills, the other member of the firm, was reported arrested in Toronto.

The charge against the two men police said here, is conspiracy in connection with stock exchange transactions.

MISSOURI Mother's Plan is succeeding . . .

WHEN your child is headachy, bilious, feverish, half-sick, with no appetite or energy, nine times out of ten, just one thing is to blame: constipation!

Cleanse the little digestive tract with California Fig Syrup and see how breath is sweetened: coated tongue cleared: eyes brightened. More than two doses are seldom necessary to drive away all signs of a congested system: make a child happy.

There isn't a child who doesn't love its rich, fruity flavor. Improved appetite, digestion and assimilation follow its use. A child's entire system is toned and strengthened.

Mrs. J. B. Thurman, 3025 Arlington Ave., St. Louis, says: "Since I found out how good California Fig Syrup is, I have kept some in the house. It never fails to help my children. I give it at the first sign of upsets or colds. Their wonderful condition proves this a good plan." Caution: The genuine always bears the name California.

PRESIDENT STUDIES PROHIBITION SURVEY

Consults With Attorney-General and Will Submit Recommendations to Congress.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The controversy over the attitude of the Law Enforcement Commission toward the prohibition laws which started a few days before Christmas will reach its high point Monday with the submission of the commission's first report to Congress by President Hoover.

The President reviewed the recommendations today in detail and then prepared his own message of transmission. It will give briefly his views on the contents of this, the first report the commission has made since it began work early last summer.

While the precise nature of the report has been carefully guarded, it was thought to contain specific recommendations for unification of the forces engaged in enforcing the dry laws. These include incorporation of the prohibition enforcement unit in the justice department and consolidation of the border patrols.

After studying the commission's recommendations, the President conferred today with Attorney-General Mitchell.

The law enforcement commission is believed by Assistant Secretary Lowman, who is in charge of prohibition enforcement at the Treasury, to be making real progress in getting at the root of the prohibition question.

He expressed the opinion that it is inadvisable to set up new detection devices for the enforcement of the dry laws until the prosecution machinery has been broadened to permit to keep the dockets clear.

Prohibition Commissioner Doran left Washington tonight for a week's inspection tour of prohibition conditions in New England and Michigan.

Agreement with statement of the Law Enforcement Commission yesterday that there was a need for better machinery in the courts was expressed today by Representative Stalker (Rep.), New York, a dry.

"I think everyone should be given a speedy trial," he said. "If courts handling prohibition cases could provide speedy trials like the police courts I believe it would prove a strong deterrent to violation of the law.

"I believe we are making substantial progress along lines of enforcement. The wets are the only ones who are complaining and are dissatisfied.

"While there is a noisy wet minority in the House, the House of Representatives is overwhelming dry and will vote for any needed dry legislation."

Representative Schafer (Rep.), Wisconsin, who recently assailed the dry laws before the House, said tonight it was significant that in the list of causes for court congestion, prohibition was mentioned first.

POWDERS WERE TO RESTORE STRAYED OR STOLEN LOVERS

Negro Preacher Who Sold "Come-Back" Potion to Brethren Held on Mail Fraud Charge.

"Come-back" powders, which Sam Lee Bell, Negro preacher of Camden, Ala., sells among the Alabama brethren with the guarantee that they will bring back strayed or stolen lovers, led to Bell's arrest in St. Louis yesterday on a Federal charge of using the mails to defraud. He was locked up in default of $2500 bond.

Bell, who is 37 years old, says he was ordained by the Mount Pleasant Church of Camden and was endowed from divine sources with power to patch up lovers' quarrels and bring about happy reconciliations. His arrest resulted from a complaint by a Negro woman of his home State, who alleged she had sent him money and he had entered into a contract with her to supply her with efficacious "come-back" powders. Those he had supplied had failed to work.

He denied using the mails to defraud, but admitted to Postoffice inspectors that he had made the contract and sent the powders. Search of a satchel he carried disclosed a Bible, some religious pamphlets and several letters which indicated he had received money through the mails for his powders.

BARTLETT REAPPOINTED TO THE POLICE BOARD

Gov. Caulfield's Former Law Partner Had Been Serving Unexpired Term of Orrick.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Jan. 11.—Gov. Caulfield today announced the reappointment of Daniel Bartlett, his former law partner, to membership on the St. Louis Board of Police Commissioners for a four-year term expiring Jan. 1, 1934.

Bartlett's former appointment, when the present board succeeded the old board last March, was only for the unexpired portion of the term of Allen C. Orrick, former head of the board, who declined to remain in office. Orrick's tenure expired a few days ago.

TWO ROBBERS GET $231 IN EAST ST. LOUIS HOLDUP

Adam Barth, owner of a soft drink place at 523 South Sixth street, East St. Louis, was robbed of $231 last night by two Negroes, one of them armed and masked, as he was counting his receipts alone in the store.

Barth has been robbed eight times in the last three years.

BUSINESS VOLUME CLOSE TO NORMAL, U. S. REPORTS SHOW

Absence of Serious Unemployment During Past Week Also Noted.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Business volume over the United States remained close to winter normal last week, it appeared from compilations of Federal reports, and there was an absence of serious unemployment. President Hoover's national business survey conference announced that the turn of the year had disclosed generally a continuing stability in the production and distribution of commodities, and based its findings on a close watch now being kept of day-to-day procedure in a most varied and extensive field of industry and trade.

"Commercial transactions during the week ending Jan. 4, as measured by the volume of checks presented to the banks for payment was substantially larger than during the previous week," the Commerce Department weekly summary of business conditions at home and abroad stated, "though less than a year ago.

"Steel plants were operating at a lower level than in the corresponding period of last year. Receipts of wheat, cotton and hogs at the principal markets were smaller than for the corresponding week of 1928, while receipts of cattle exceeded those of a year ago. The distribution of goods, as indicated by the volume of freight-car loadings for the latest reported week, was lower than in the same period of a year ago.

"The general index of wholesale prices was fractionally less than during the preceding week and considerably lower than a year ago."

Five Killed in Fight in Mexico.

By the Associated Press.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 11.—Dispatches to Excelsior from Zacatecas say five persons were killed at the town of Calena in a fight over the division of some land.

No More White Bread in France.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—Fine white French bread, world famous before the war, is no more. Governments have been promising its return for years but they continue to enforce flour-making restrictions as "temporary." A new hope of good bread is offered by Jean Hennessy, Minister of Agriculture. Meantime, however, to protect domestic wheat-growers, he places a limit of 5 per cent on the foreign wheat that may be used in bread flour. In general flour is supposed to be free of the wartime adulterants, but the law still permits its adulteration by 8 per cent of rye flour.

GERMANS NOTIFIED TO COME TO TERMS

Creditors at Hague Conference Insist on Definite Proposal on War Debt.

By the Associated Press.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 11. — The creditor Powers at the second Hague Reparations Conference gave the German delegation an energetic summons to come to terms this morning after days of argument about details. Foreign Minister Curtus of Germany postponed his departure for the League Council at Geneva to draw up written proposals for further discussion.

Premier Tardieu of France and Chancellor of the Exechequer Snowden of England discovered last night that the work of the subcommittees had been held up because the German members had received no instructions. This morning, in the course of the most animated session of the present meeting, they told the Germans that the creditors could wait no longer for them to take a definite position.

The chief points at issue were whether military sanctions as a guarantee of German payments under the Young plan should continue as part of the Allied reparations policy, the question of an eventual moratorium, and the maturity dates for installments of payments.

After considering the written German proposals on restricting assigned revenues, on the date for paying installments and on the moratorium, the creditors handed the German delegation a revised proposal on the moratorium, which provides that the interested parties shall discuss on the basis of the Young plan any eventual demand for a moratorium. Disputes will be submitted to arbitration.

Tardieu made clear in a meeting of the "big six" that the French can accept the Young plan only if they have assuarnce that the German Government will abstain from any operation that might spoil the market before the first installment of reparations bonds is issued.

The Germans replied that though they had no wish to place obstacles in the way of marketing these securities they could not undertake such an abstention for a definite period without consulting the managing board of the Reichsbank.

Tardieu interpreted "the managing board" to mean Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank and chief of preceding German reparations delegations, who refrained from coming to the present conference. He inquried banteringly whether the German Government might not be able to decide on its own policy without asking permission of Dr. Schacht.

The Germans took this in good part, and the chief delegates adjourned until Monday with their good humor restored and their confidence in getting away from the Hague toward the end of next week renewed.

SLAIN BANK ROBBER FOUND TO BE TRAVELING SALESMAN

Identified as R. R. David of Springfield, Mo.; Captured Companion an Ex-School Teacher.

By the Associated Press.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Jan. 11.—The man who was fatally shot while fleeing from a robbery yesterday of the Bank of Rogersville (Mo.), today was identified as R. R. David, 45-year-old traveling salesman, of Springfield. His companion in the robbery and attempted escape, Leroy Burdick, former school teacher of New Castle, Pa., is in the Webster County jail at Marshfield.

Searchers today found in the woods near Rogersville all but $70 of the $981 stolen in the holdup. The two men tried to flee on foot when their car became stuck in snow and were surrounded by a posse of farmers, David being instantly killed and Burdick surrendering. David was heavily in debt.

By the Associated Press.

NEW CASTLE, Pa., Jan. 11.—Roy Burdick left here eight years ago after serving as instructor in English and Latin in the senior high school. Later he engaged in the undertaking business at Cambridge Springs, but returned to teaching. While here he married Miss Edna Kirby, New Castle science teacher. She is said to be his third wife.

As Europe Sees Carnera.

IF European comment spells anything, the first opponent picked for the new beef trust hope, Primo Carnera, ought to be Fred Fulton, Farmer Lodge, or some other member of the Horizontal Society. English and French commentators, without exception, declare that all that Primo knows about boxing, if laid end to end, would reach clear around the dial of a lady's wrist watch. We deduce, without much concentration, that the European critics believe that Primo knows something less about boxing than Art Shires and that his mobility compares with that of an overloaded truck on a gumbo road. Here are a few remarks by British and French observers of Primo in action against Stribling:

As Others Saw Him.

"IT is evident that the Italian is the sheerest novice. His only claim to attention at this time is that he possesses unusual physical dimensions. He is a little worse than the average beginner at boxing."

"Primo was crude, resourceless, cumbersome and primitively uncontrollable, when he should have been cool and calculating."

"Primo has everything to learn. He punches from the wrong foot, does not know what to do when held and does not know how to land his blows."

"Actually, of course, he never possessed, even in physique, one essential of the modern successful fighter."

"Carnera is not the unbeatable giant many supposed he was. Few fighters have ever had their limitations so exposed. Still, there is no reason why he should not become champion of the world some day."

That last sentence is the Kohinoor of all the above gems. Lacking everything, Primo may yet aspire to the pinnacle. However, it is more and more apparent that for a time at least, the farther away from real fighters Carnera's manager keeps him, the more likely the big edifice will be to avoid early collapse.

Educating the Man Mountain.

BECAUSE he has such a splendid physical framework —despite comment to the contrary of one of the above European observers — Americans who have viewed Carnera believe he CAN be taught enough boxing to enable him to climb to the title.

But not in a few weeks.

Men with tremendous physiques and little experience have aspired to titles before— and won them. The standout among all these was James J. Jeffries who, with only 10 fights experience fought Bob Fitzsimmons and wrested the title from him, by virtue of a grizzly bear frame and a terrible left hook.

Another was John L. Sullivan, the mighty man of Boston. John

CARDS SCHEDULE 17 SPRING GAMES, 15 OF THEM WITH MAJOR LEAGUERS

CONTESTS ALREADY BOOKED BY CARDS

The Cardinals' scheduled exhibitions as picked out of dates announced by rival teams follow:

March 8-9—Athletics at Miami.
March 10—Athletics at Fort Myers.
March 11—Athletics at Bradenton.
March 12—Braves at St. Petersburg.
March 13—Tigers at Tampa.
March 16—Phillies at Winter Haven.
March 18—Tigers at Bradenton.
March 19—Yankees at St. Petersburg.
March 20—Yankees at Bradenton.
March 21—Yankees at St. Petersburg.
March 23—Indianapolis at Sarasota.
March 24—Braves at Bradenton.
March 25—Indianapolis at Bradenton.
March 28—Phillies at Bradenton.
April 12-13—Browns at Sportsman's Park.

By Herman Wecke

Although the management of the St. Louis Cardinals has not made known its exhibition game schedule for the spring training trip, a perusal of the dates announced by the various clubs which will go through the early paces in Florida, indicates that Gabby Street's athletes will be quite busy in the "grape fruit" league.

Going through the dates announced by other teams, it is found that the Cardinals will play 15 games during the month of March. In addition are the two spring series contests with the Browns at Sportsman's Park, April 12 and 13.

In the "grape fruit" battles, a majority of the competition will be furnished by major league teams, inasmuch as all but two of the battles are with big tent aggregations. The two exceptions are games with Indianapolis of the American Association, March 23, at Sarasota, and March 25 at Bradenton, where the Cardinals will train again this spring after a three-year visit to Avon Park.

Eleven With A. L. Clubs.

Including the two spring series games with the Browns, 11 of the contests which the Cardinals are known to have arranged from the dates announced by the rival clubs, are with American Leaguers. Four are with the world champion Athletics; three with the Yankees, and two with the Tigers. The Braves and Phillies are the only National League teams found to have scheduled battles with the Cardinals. Brooklyn announced its dates the past week, but there were no games with the men of Gabby Street on the list. The Reds and Red Sox, the other two major nines training in Florida, are a bit out of the way, being at Orlando and Pensacola, respectively.

Starting March 8, when the Athleitcs will be met in the first of a series of four games, it will be just one exhibition after the other for Street's 1930 hopefuls. After meeting the Mackmen, March 8 and 9 at Miami, the clubs move to Fort Myers, the Athletics' training camp, for a March 10 engagement and then battle at Bradenton, March 11.

To Play McKechnie's Team.

Following this, the Braves will be met at St. Petersburg, March 12, and the Tigers at Tampa the following day. Then comes a breather until March 16, when Winter Haven will be visited for a meeting with the Phillies. The series with the Yankees opens March 19 at St. Petersburg. The following day hostilities will be resumed at Bradenton and the next the third battle is scheduled at the New York Americans' camp.

BROWNS TO TAKE ROOKIE SLUGGER TO SPRING CAMP

Tedd J. Gullic, right-handed slugger who played in the outfield for Tulsa and Wichita Falls last year, will be given a tryout at the Browns' spring training camp, Business Manager Bill Friel announced last night.

Gullic is 22 years old, weighs 180 pounds and is 6 feet 2 inches tall. He played 142 games for Tulsa last season, making 177 hits for an average of .316. His safeties included 32 home runs, three triples and 42 doubles.

After being sent to Wichita Falls, Gullic played in 17 games and it was his batting splurge there that caused the Browns to consider him seriously as a prospect for the big show. In the 17 contests he went to bat 58 times and made 30 hits for a total of 55 bases and a batting average of .517. His wallops at Wichita Falls included seven home runs and four doubles.

Cardinals Sell Fort Wayne Club

Branch Rickey, vice-president and business manager of the Cardinals, announced last night that the Fort Wayne club of the Central League, operated for several years as a Cardinal farm, had been sold to Chester G. Schiefer of Fort Wayne.

Rickey said the sale was not a result in any way of Commissioner Landis' recent attack on the "chain store" system, and that the St. Louis National League club would add another minor league team to the organization to take the place of Fort Wayne.

Kansas Aggie Wrestler 'Throws' Himself in Meet

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

COLUMBIA, Mo., Jan. 11.—Ben Barber, 125-pound Kansas Aggies wrestler, tonight took his place along with other athletes who have pulled prize "boners," defeating himself by a fall in a match with a Missouri U. wrestler here. The Tigers won the meet by a 25 to 14 score.

With a time advantage of more than two minutes over his opponent, Roberts, Tiger 125-pounder, the Kansas Aggie pulled the unusual faux pas of "throwing" himself by squirming into a position under his opponent so that his shoulders were planted firmly on the mat. Referee H. A. Allison, consoling Barber, raised Roberts' hand in victory. Barber smiled sheepishly and retired.

Aside from the fall Barber handed Robertson, Capt. Sappington, 145, and Fowler Young, both of Missouri, and Hugh Errington, heavy, of K. S. A. C., won their bouts by the fall route.

The summaries:

115 lbs.—Luck, Missouri, defeated Latimer, Kansas State, decision. Time, advantage 3 minutes, 5 seconds.

125 lbs.—Roberts, Missouri, defeated Barger, Kansas State, fall. Time, 4 minutes, 26 seconds.

135 lbs.—Moore, Missouri, and Fickel, Kansas State, wrestled to a draw in two extra periods.

U. S. WALKER CUP TEAM INCLUDES VOIGT AND MOE

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11. — The American Walker Cup golf team for 1930 was announced today as follows: Bobby Jones, Atlanta, captain; Harrison R. Johnston, St. Paul; George Von Elm, Detroit; Francis Ouimet, Boston; George Voigt, New York; Dr. O. F. Willing, Portland, Ore.; Jess W. Sweetser, New York; and Donald H. Moe, Portland, Ore. Roland MacKenzie, Washington, and Maurice McCarthy Jr., New York, were named alternates.

The team will sail some time in April to meet a British team in defense of the trophy which was won by the Americans in 1928 at Chicago.

Five of the eight regulars were members of the victorious 1928 team. Dr. Willing also is a veteran of Walker Cup competition, but Voigt and Moe have been selected to play for the first time. MacKenzie was a regular on the last team and McCarthy was an alternate.

In addition to the team match, all the members of the squad also are expected to compete in the British Amateur championship. Jones and Von Elm probably will participate also in the British open, won by Bobby in 1926 and 1927.

Douglas Is Re-elected.

Announcement of the Walker cup players was made by H. H. Ramsay, chairman of the Championship Committee of the United States Golf Association at the close of the annual meeting of the association.

Findlay S. Douglas was re-elected president and reports of all committees, adopted without discussion. H. H. Ramsay was re-

SETBACK IS BILLS' FIRST IN 15 GAMES; STRONG GETS FOUR POINTS, OLDFIELD SIX

By James M. Gould

The St. Louis University Billikens now can start off on a perfectly new winning streak. Their old one, spanning parts of two basketball seasons, was ruined last night when five young men from South Dakota State gave them a 40-minute lesson and defeated them, 33-18. It was the first set-back for the Billikens in 15 games. They had won eight straight this season, some of them from outstanding teams in various sections.

And, while the winning streak was being broken, it was well broken, for not even the most hardened Billiken fan could deny the St. Louisans were completely outplayed. Only once—just after the start of the second period, did the Billikens flash the form that has brought them fame in the sport. Then, having trailed at the halfway mark, 11-13, the Blue and White attacked sharply and ran the score to 15-13 in their favor. It proved just a flash, however, and a minute later the South Dakotans were again leading and never again were headed.

Nicholson Scores 12 Points.

Capt. Oldfield was the chief Billiken scorer—if it may so be designated. As a matter of fact, Oldfield scored only six points, two field goals and two free throws. For South Dakota, Nicholson was the cleverest performer. He shot four field goals and as many free throws for 12 points. Capt. Herting, a guard, was next high with eight points.

There was evidence of staleness in the Billikens' play, though it is extremely doubtful if, had they been at their best, they could have beaten the Northerners as the latter functioned last night. The visitors were faster, guarded better and proved better shots—and there isn't much more to basketball superiority.

Coach Nyikos started his second-string men and kept them in for 10 minutes. However, he took them out after 10 minutes of play when the Dakotans were leading, 6-4, so the burden of proof was on the regulars and their failure to come through cost the game.

Visitors First to Count.

Play was slow at the start. The first Dakota dash was broken up but they were the first to score when Nicholson shot a field goal. After scoring, he crashed into the barrier at the south end of the gym and took time out but resumed play. At the three-minute mark, Anderson tied the score and Roberts added another shot from the floor to give the Billikens a 4-2 advantage.

After several futile rushes by both teams, Kennedy was short on a long throw and Plunkert missed a good chance. Roberts fouled Herting, who made a single shot good and it was tied at 4-4 when Nicholson sank a free throw.

Engleman outspeeded the entire Billiken team and counted a field goal. With the score 6-4 in favor of South Dakota, the Billiken second-stringers went out and the regulars went in. The speed of the game increased a bit and Strong took a pass from Oldfield to score and again tie the count. A foul by Drury gave Hamann a chance to make a free throw and he converted the point. A similar throw by Oldfield made it 7-7, but Nicholson sank two and Hamann one field goal and the Dakotans were 6 points to the good. Passes, Drury to Oldfield and Oldfield to Drury, gave the Billikens two baskets as the whistle ended the first period with the score: South Dakota, 13; St. Louis, 11.

Billikens Take Lead.

With the tide going against them, there was no question of the regulars starting the second half. It was the first time this season the Billikens had been behind at the half. Rushes were exchanged with no result until two minutes of action when Drury tied it and Oldfield sank a long one to put the St. Louisans in the lead for the last time. The score at this point was 15—13. Capt. Herting soon tied it up and Nicholson put the Jack Rabbits two points to the good with a clear goal. The Billikens were constantly being out-maneuvered. Nicholson was fouled by Hunt and sank his one throw, Herting making it 22—15, South Dakota up, with a difficult basket.

Strong sank one for St. Louis but Raak, substituting for Lowe, nullified this gain with a field goal. Lintzenich replaced Hunt at guard for St. Louis. A double foul was called. Joyce and Herting participating but both missed their chances, Oldfield sank a free heave and a rush by Engleman made the score 26-18.

Two fouls by Oldfield helped the Rabbits along and Hamann went the length of the field to score. The final scores were scored by Nicholson and Raak, the former on free throws and the latter on a shot from the floor just as the game ended.

Oldfield Is Injured.

Toward the end of the second half, Oldfield was sent to the floor by a vicious rush and his left eye was badly cut. He stayed in the game, however, after being plastered up.

Engleman, the South Dakota center, is an all-round athlete. He played on the football team last season and, in the Drake Relays, scored 14 points for his school. He is tall and husky with it.

The Billikens used 11 men while the Dakotans got along very well with six. Five of these played at least 35 of the 40 minutes.

The new Billiken winning-streak, if any, will have a chance to get started against the Washington Bears, the two St. Louis colleges meeting at the Washington Field House Tuesday night.

By Harold J. Tuthill.

Cleveland High registered its third consecutive basketball victory in the City High School League, defeating Roosevelt, 24-19, last night, while Beaumont won from Central, 19-15, in the other half of the double-header, played at Roosevelt.

In winning, Cleveland scored first and was in front all the way, having a 15-6 advantage, but got a real scare in the third period when Roosevelt ran the score to 15-14.

The Rough Riders' spurt was due to four goals from the field, two by Parker and one each by Griffen and Yeager. But Cleveland soon widened the gap on two free throws by Ketterer, one by Jansen and a field goal by Landry. Roosevelt did not make another serious threat.

Cleveland used up about three minutes of the fourth period in passing the ball about, Roosevelt not touching the oval for this time. However, the play was such that at no time did it look like Cleveland was "stalling," but rather like real passing for a chance to shoot.

Rough play and wild shooting marked the opening game, which saw Central go down to defeat for the third time in league play, while Beaumont gained its first victory in two starts.

After counting six points in the opening quarter, the North Side team had to be content with a 6-6 tie at the half, failing to tally in the second period. Central made three points each in the first and second periods.

The teams matched scores in the third period, and again were even at 13 points.

In the final quarter, Schwandt made a free throw and Walsh two field baskets and a free throw. Central's only scores in this period were a pair of free throws by Ens.

Cleveland holds first place in the league standing, by virtue of its three victories, but is not the only undefeated team, Soldan having taken its two starts. The standings follow:

FOG DELAYS START OF BIRD DOG TRIALS AT HOLLY SPRINGS

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., Jan. 11.—Owing to a heavy fog this morning the running of the All-age stake in the All-America Bird-dog trials could not be resumed today until 1 o'clock in the afternoon and as the entry is a record-breaking one it is not likely that the stake can be finished before Wednesday or possibly Thursday afternoon. Thus far some very good races have been witnessed. Among the outstanding ones of Friday afternoon were the performances of the pointers Eagle Ferris and Griffith's Happy Rap. The former is owned by Dr. H. E. Longsdorf of Mount Holly, N. J., and is handled by E. Farrier of Union Springs, Ala. and the latter by Rev. J. T. Coolahan of Baltimore, Md.

In the string of Pete Dixon of Catoosa, Ok., Eagle Ferris found three bevies of birds and did perfect work while Happy Rap found two and was equally good. Birds have been very plentiful throughout the trials and all the dogs will be obliged to show perfection on game if any can be held out that they are entitled to the prize money.

Canada Lee Wins.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Canada Lee, Harlem welterweight, won by a technical knockout in the sixth round of his 10-round bout with Billy Algers of Phoenix, Ariz., at the Olympic A. C. tonight. The referee stopped the fight when Algers suffered a bad gash over his eye. Lee weighed 147.

Another Local Star Appointed To West Point

JOE LINTZENICH

Lintzenich, as told in Friday's Post-Dispatch, has been recommended for appointment to West Point and has taken the examinations. He has not yet learned whether he was successful in passing them.

Lintzstenich was captain of the 1929 St. Louis University football team and its outstanding backfield star. In connection with Lintzenich's appointment, it will be recalled that a few weeks ago Harvey Jablonsky, captain of Washington University's 1929 football eleven, received a similar appointment.

An interesting possibility is that these rival St. Louis varsity captains may be teammates some day on the Cadet eleven.

Kansas Hands Oklahoma First Big Six Defeat

NORMAN, Ok., Jan. 11.—Five Kansas University basketball men playing as individual stars, but at the same time forming a court combination which functioned to perfection, defeated the University of Oklahoma here tonight by a score of 34 to 22.

It was the first Big Six Conference loss the Oklahomans ever suffered and stopped the Sooners' conference winning streak at 31 games. It was the opening conference game for both teams.

Dr. Forrest C. Allen, who at one time ruled the old Missouri Valley Conference with almost unbeatable Kansas University basketball teams, introduced a great club to Oklahomans here tonight. The Jayhawkers played a remarkable game of basketball. They passed, pivoted, blocked, dribbled and shot with the finesse of old.

The score:

FLYERS PLAY TULSA TEAM HERE TONIGHT

By W. J. McGoogan

After a none too satisfactory invasion of the North, the St. Louis Flyers returned home last night to resume their American Hockey Association schedule against the Tulsa Oilers at the Winter Garden tonight and tomorrow.

The game tonight will be the first Sunday night contest played by the Flyers in the two years of their existence. In New York, Sunday is the regular hockey night and the fans flock to Madison Square Garden for the contests. With last year's champions as their opponents, the Flyers expect to draw a good crowd this evening.

Of the six games played during the swing through the North the Flyers won one, tied three and lost two. And today they are fourth with 20 points. Kansas City and Duluth are tied for first with 23 points each, while Minneapolis is third with 21 points. Right behind the Flyers is Tulsa with 19 points, while St. Paul is last with 16.

The contests with Tulsa open a long home stand for the Flyers for following the games they jump to Kansas City for a game with the Pla-Mors Wednesday, then come back here to play Kansas City Jan. 20 and 22, then comes St. Paul, Jan. 24 and 25; Duluth, Jan. 28 and 30; Minneapolis, Feb. 2 and 4; Kansas City, Feb. 10 and 12; Tulsa, Feb. 18 and 19.

So it will be seen that the Flyers play one game away from home from now until Feb. 19. With 14 games scheduled for their home rink, the fate of the Flyers this season should be pretty well determined by the time the club turns north late in February for its second and final trip through that territory for the season.

All of the players are in fairly good condition, although Coach Jamieson is still suffering from a few of the minor injuries he received in recent games.

Forward Koski whom it had been expected would be signed at Duluth, failed to appear.

By Ed Van Every
Of the New York World Sport Staff

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Stillman's gymnasium is packed to suffocation. A splotch of faces looking rather pasty through a haze of smoke seems to be pitching over toward the two rings that have been erected in this high-ceiled, rather cramped one-time hall or lodge room. Even a Jack Dempsey workout never drew such a crowd as turned out to see this new fistic giant from over the seas go through his first paces in this country. Suddenly above this sea of faces an enormous head appears. What a man!

Though the most of us have come merely with the idea of getting a look at a physical freak, it does not take Primo, Carnera many minutes to imbue the onlooker with the idea that there is something more to the man than size—and he is surely well equipped in that respect. Physically this giant of an Italian, who has just come into prominence as the most tremendous hulk of a fighting man the ring has ever seen, is a fine physical figure, for all his enormous proportions.

Long before the memory of the present generation, there was another ring monster, who appears to have been even bigger than this Carnera—who is surely big enough. Freeman, known in prize ring annals as the American Giant, actually stood just one and one-half inches under seven feet in height, and in fighting condition scaled 332 pounds. So this made him one-half inch taller than this Italian Goliath and about 50 pounds heavier. Of course the humorously inclined will hint that a good part of the Carnera weight is carried in his enormous feet. They are certainly some "plantations," but it is surprising with what ease and grace he can pick them up and lay them down. Though it may not sound reasonable, he is light on his own feet.

He's Bigger Than Willard.

How does the newcomer shape up as compared with Jess Willard, who up till now had been the biggest of pugilists in modern ring memory, and with Jack Dempsey, generally regarded as the ideal human fighting machine and who, for all the former's physical advantage, had been plenty big enough to literally tear apart the towering Willard. Jack Curley, the man who had brought Big Jess to the title through the downfall of Jack Johnson, and who had been an interested onlooker at the Toledo massacre of Willard by Dempsey, was watching Carnera go through his paces. He seemed an ideal person to pass comparative judgment on the make-up of the three men.

"Willard, who towered more than six inches over Dempsey," said Curley, was three inches under Carnera, whose height is said to be 6 feet 10 inches. At first glance the Italian does not look to be taller than Jess; this is due to the fact that Primo is more normally proportioned all over than was Jess, whose height made him seem somewhat ungainly. This Italian has the most beautifully muscled back I have ever looked on, with the possible exception of Hackenschmidt."

Carnera was posed at the time for the photographers. He was seated on a stool with hands folded and locked behind his head and his bulging muscles tenser. We had an excellent view of those tremendous shoulders which find a five-foot tape measure four inches too small to circle. I could understand how Curley, who has had a close-up of all the giants of the ring and the wrestling mat for the past quarter of a century, could be impressed. He pointed out how the tremendous shoulders tapered down toward the waist.

"His balance is much better than that of Willard," declared the promoter, "though so big a man cannot hope to attain the tigerish grace of Dempsey. But Carnera is exceptionally supple, more so in some ways, surprising to say, even than was Jack. Look the calisthentics he has just gone through; the ease with which he bends in touching his toes. Some of the stunts he is doing now would have been hard for Dempsey at any time."

Primo's Unusual Reach.

Then Curley called attention to the Carnera reach. While the Italian has a seven inch advantage over Dempsey, whose reach measured 78 inches, Primo is only two inches superior to Willard. The newcomer's arms are not long in comparison to the rest of his body. But his arms make far weightier human clubs than those possessed by either Willard or Dempsey. The Willard forearm had nothing on that of Dempsey, each was 14 inches, three inches less than Primo's. The Willard biceps of 16 inches are two inches and one-half less than Carnera's.

"A real tip-off as to the physical superiority of Carnera over Willard," pointed out Curley, "can be found in the chest measurements. Jess's chest taped 46 inches, only four inches more than Dempsey's for all the difference of the two in size. The Italian's chest is 12 inches bigger around than was Jack's. However, you get some inkling of the physical marvel that Dempsey was when you take note of the chest expansion. Jack's expansion was four inches, one-half inch more than Willard. Carnera, for all his superiority in frame, only beat Jack half an inch."

Examination of the legs made the Carnera anchorage seem rather cumbersome. Dempsey's beautiful under-pinnings were certainly built for speed and power. His 15 inch calf was only one-quarter inch under that of Big Jess. The Carnera calf tapes 20 inches.

Equipped for Service.

Curley also gave it as his opinion that Carnera is more ideally fitted for the ring than Willard. His temperament is less surly than was Jess'. Dempsey was always high strung and nervously tensed to an extreme, even in his gym workouts, but this was ideal for his tigerish style of fighting. Men of such abnormal hulk as Willard or Carnera would find such a ferocity of speed as that which was a part of the Dempsey attack, something that was not feasible of attainment and that would not help in effectiveness: that is effectiveness that would lend itself advantageously to their physical makeup.

Giants like Carnera and Willard figure to get the best results by fighting in a straight stand-up stance. This makes their chins not easy to hit, and if they can accomplish real defensive skill their enormous arms make ample protection for the body and the midsection in particular. According to Curley, the Carnera stance is more natural and easy than that of Willard, and the Italian should make the far better boxer of the two. Already the Italian has a better left than the one-time cowboy, while Primo's right uppercut also looks quite natural. The Jess right uppercut, however, was a tremendously effective weapon.

Facially, the Italian is far more attractive than was Big Jess. While Carnera has not the magnetic fighting face of Dempsey, his features are of well-cut regularity, and there is humor and intelligence in his eyes. His head is very large, and when you see that huge visage moving down toward the ring over the sea of faces there is something about the appearance of this modern Goliath that is going to give you a thrill.

SOLDAN HIGH TO RECEIVE YALE BOWL, TUESDAY

Soldan High School will receive the Yale Bowl, signifying football supremacy, for the fourth time next Tuesday afternoon, and may obtain permanent possession of the trophy by once more winning the championship of the City High School League.

The trophy will be presented to Coach James Cook and members of his team at the Soldan auditorium at 2 p. m. in the presence of the assembled students and Yale alumni. All Yale men have been urged to attend the exercises. Lewis S. Haslam will make the presentation address. Other speakers will be Ira Wight, Yale halfback in 1922, whose subject will be, "Football"; Russell W. Murphy, secretary-treasurer of the Alumni Association and a former Yale quarterback, and John Rush Powell, district superintendent of high schools and former principal of Soldan, a Yale alumnus. There will be Yale songs by the Soldan Glee Club and a selection of college tunes by the school band.

The donor of the trophy was Vincent L. Price. The Yale Bowl was placed in competition in 1915, when it was won by McKinley High School. The record of the competition is as follows: Soldan, four victories, 1919, '21, '25 and '29; Cleveland, three, 1920, '24, '26; McKinley, two, 1915, '17; Central two, 1918, '22; Roosevelt, one victory, 1927. In 1916 the season ended in a tie between McKinley and Central, and in 1928 Roosevelt and Soldan tied, no advance being made toward a permanent award those years. In 1923 there was no award.

The bowl is of silver, a foot high and 18 inches in diameter, and on the face is a blue enamel shield inscribed, "Yale Bowl, Yale Alumni Association." The names of the winning schools are engraved on the side opposite the shield, and on the bottom is the cryptic inscription, "32 pints."

Los Angeles Open Tourney Set Back a Day, Agua Caliente Event Till Jan. 20, Due to Rain

By the Associated Press.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 11.—The two major golf tournaments of the Pacific Coast winter campaign—the Los Angeles $10,000 open and the Agua Caliente $25,000 event—were postponed today because of heavy rains which left the courses unplayable.

The setting up of the dates for the Agua Caliente tourney which was to have opened next Tuesday, followed the decision of the committee in charge of the Los Angeles affair to discontinue play until tomorrow.

The second round of the $10,000 event will be played tomorrow and the 50 low finishers and ties will take part in the 36-hole final competition Monday. The Riviera Course, scene of the fifth annual tournament which yesterday saw only one player, Johnny Rogers, Denver pro, finish under par, was in even worse condition today. This fact coupled with forecast of more rain during the day, resulted in the postponement.

A wet course also was given as the reason for the delay in the tourney across the Mexican border by officials of Agua Caliente. This "big money" event will now start a week from Monday (Jan. 20) and will extend to Jan. 23.

The postponement of the Los Angeles tournament was criticised by Bobby Cruickshank and Johnny Farrell, New York professionals, who contended that conditions today were no worse than yesterday.

"The course and weather," said Farrell, a former champion, "were better today than they were yesterday. I believe the committee made a mistake in postponing the event."

"This is California's rainy season" said Cruickshank. "We have no reason to believe that the present storm will let up for tomorrow or Monday. The condition of the Riviera course today was better than yesterday."

Others of the contenders also voiced the opinion that the tourney should have gone ahead today as scheduled.

TEXAS LEAGUE BARS BROADCASTING

Falcaro Beats Smith and Daw.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Bowling two brilliant 10-game matches, Joe Falcaro of New York, world's match game bowling champion, took the lead at the start of the all-star bowling tornament here tonight. After beating Jimmy Smith of Chicago, 2208 to 2050 in the afternoon, Falcaro returned to the alleys tonight to defeat Charlie Daw of Milwaukee, 2227 to 1905.

ABAD SIGNED FOR BOUT AT THE COLISEUM

Tommy Sullivan, fight promoter, last night announced the signing of Davey Abad to headline the next boxing show of the Frederick W. Stockham Post of the American Legion at the Coliseum, Jan. 21.

Abad, through his manager, Eddie Meade of Cleveland, agreed to the St. Louis engagement on condition that Sullivan get Eddie Shea, the little Chicago Italian, as his opponent. But——

Sullivan spent some telephone toll yesterday to get in touch with Joe Glaser, Shea's manager. Glaser wants $6000 for Shea to fight Abad, Sullivan said, and the promoter thinks that is too big a chunk for one fighter. He hopes to get Shea's manager to shave his figure. As a result of the purse demand of Shea, the bout is in the air.

Abad had been under suspension by the Missouri Athletic Commission, but Judge Seneca Taylor said he would lift the ban to permit Abad to appear at the Coliseum.

IOWA ASKED ABOUT ATHLETES COMING FROM OTHER STATES

By the Associated Press.

IOWA CITY, Ia., Jan. 11.—A dozen star athletes of the University of Iowa prepared tonight to await the report to be made to the Western Conference by a Special Investigating Committee which looked into the matter of their eligibility. The men had been declared ineligible by Iowa officials because of having borrowed from a "trust fund" for athletes.

C. O. Williams, chairman of the Iowa athletic board, said today that Iowa has not retracted from its former stand that the athletes were innocent of intentional violation of the conference rules.

It became known today that one of the questions the committee considered important in connection with the athletes was how it happened that, if the athletes were innocent, so many of them were from states other than Iowa. It was inferred that the committee considered the fact that several of the men came from out of the State as evidence that the trust fund had been used to induce them to attend the university.

Travis' Widow Offers One of His Medals as Prize

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., Jan.11. ONE of the numerous valuable trophies won by the late Walter J. Travis when he was king of amateur golfers, a generation ago, will be awarded as a prize in the third annual tournament for the national championship of golf club champions, to be played here beginning next Wednesday, it was announced today.

The new prize is being donated by Mrs. Walter J. Travis, widow of the several times American amateur champion and the first American representative to win the British amateur crown, back in 1904.

The proffer of one of Travis' favorite possessions for the club champions' classic game was received in a letter from Mrs. Travis this afternoon. It is to be a gold medal, one of the prizes that Travis regarded most highly in his collection.

Mrs. Travis' letter follows:

I learn that a Walter J. Travis memorial cup is to be given for the national championship of golf club champions. Keeping my husband's name in such loving memory touches me exceedingly, and I should be very glad to present one of the many gold medals which he won to go with the cup.

South Broadway To Hold Another Ring Show Jan. 30

Clifford Doetzel, former senior flyweight champion of the Western A. A. U., and Woodrow Williams, the present junior bantam titleholder, may meet in a return battle on Thursday night, Jan. 30, according to Matchmaker Willie Miller of the South Broadway A. C., who announced last night that he was trying to pair the speedy fistic rivals for a special attraction on his club's next card. Doetzel shaded Williams in a lively ring debate at the South Side arena last month.

The coming mitt tourney will be the second sponsored by the South Broadway club under the jurisdiction of the recently organized Mississippi Valley Amateur Association, composed of seven local organizations, which withdrew from the A. A. U. because of the district organization's effort to levy a 5 per cent tax on the gate receipts at amateur boxing shows.

Winners of special attractions on last Thursday night's card are in line for other star bouts on the second program, according to Miller, who stated that he was seeking a middleweight opponent for Johnny Miles of the South Broadway team, a lightweight foeman for Joe Herbst Jr. of the Olympian A. C., a welterweight to meet Earl Taylor of the Business Men's A. C., and a featherweight to pit against Carl Schaffer of the South Side squad.

St. Charles Plays Soldan.

St. Charles High School will play two basketball games this week, meeting Soldan Wednesday evening and Kirkwood Friday. The latter game will be St. Charles' first County League tilt. Both contests will be played on the St. Charles court.

18 ENTRIES IN TITLE HANDBALL TOURNAMENT

Dr. Sam H. Rich, of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, will defend his singles title in the Western A. A. U. handball championship tournament which opens at the Y. M. H. A. tomorrow night when the first round singles will get under way.

Seventeen others have entered the tournament, among them Robert Larmore, city champion, Harry Greenfield who won the City Class B and the Bankers' tournaments a year ago and Mike Cunningham, veteran fireman, who a few years ago was regarded as the best player in the city.

In addition to the singles championship, the doubles title will be decided and in this event Dr. Rich is paired with Milton Smith of Washington U. while Cunningham and Robert Weiller will play together. Cunningham's former partner, Jack Srenco has moved to Detroit.

First Matches Tomorrow.

The first matches will get under way tomorrow evening at 7:30 o'clock. Three courts will be used and it is considered likely that all of Monday evening, Tuesday and part of Wednesday will be devoted to the singles while the doubles will start after the singles matches Wednesday.

Semi-finals in the doubles and singles will be played Thursday evening with the finals in both divisions scheduled for Saturday.

Among the referees will be Walter Kammann, president of the St. Louis handball Association, formerly a player of note, Dr. Fitzporter, Bill Bascom, Newton J. Funk and Alderman Waldman.

TIGERS SEND SCHUBLE TO BEAUMONT CLUB

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 11.—Heinie Schuble, shortstop, has been sent down to the Beaumont club of the Texas League by the Detroit Tigers.

Charles F. Navin, secretary of the Detroit club, said that the release was on an option. The Tigers bought Schuble from the Houston club for $35,000.

NEW STARS OUT FOR WASHINGTON AQUATIC SQUAD

Nine letter men reporting and a wealth of new material give evidence that Washington University may have a far better swimming team than last year. The Bears after winning the Missouri Valley Conference tank title for six consecutive years were nosed out by Drake last year, but present indications are that Washington will not only be a contender for the title but will stack up well against several Western Conference teams carded for duel meets.

The squad is being coached again by Karl Bauer who is commencing his second year as the Washington mentor. Bauer, a member of the swimming and water polo teams that represented Germany in the Olympic games of 1912, coached the Bears in 1925 and last year.

More Experienced Team.

Although the team this season may not vary much from last year's aggregation, Coach Bauer is optimistic because he is confident that his swimmers have considerable more strength and endurance than was the case last winter. For several weeks Bauer has been giving the tank candidates a series of corrective exercises on the gymnasium floor in an effort to build more physical ability. And an added year's experience plus a more sound knowledge of the technic of swimming will help.

The veterans back are Captain Bob Brenner, breast stroke; Ralph Skinner, 220 and 440 free style; Lestern Bauert, Missouri Valley fancy diving champion; Charles Wolf, fancy diver; Pat Frank, free styler; Willis Marshall, back stroke; Glion Curtis, breast stroke and medley, and Fred Moore, breast stroke. Howard Sample, a letter man, is due to report later. Frank and Marshall, however, are letter men from the 1928 team. The only veteran missing from last season is Homer Heideman, Valley back stroke champion, who is now assistant to Coach Bauer.

Many New Candidates.

Paul Knuckle, a squad member last year, gives promise of developing into a star in the medley race, a new addition to the program of events. Dave Litvag, another squad member from last year, also shows signs of being a crack free styler.

Probably the outstanding newcomer is Norman Moore, 50 and 100 free styler who promises to give Washington an advantage in these events that was not forthcoming last year. In fact several sophomores have shown marked ability in the sprints. Others are Shelby England, Yott Whitemor, Charles Playford, Fred Deibel, R. A. Miller and Bill Baer. Homer Alvis, a candidate for the back stroke, is another possibility.

Although several local practice meets are carded for this month, the regular schedule will not commence until February. Dual engagements are carded with Northwestern, Iowa and Minnesota and Illinois is tenatively scheduled. Drake will be the only Valley team to be met in a dual match.

EXTRA INNINGS by J. Roy Stockton

Quantity Won't Win.

BRANCH RICKEY, discussing the Cardinal prospects, was asked if the St. Louis club would operate again in 1930, as it did last season, with a small squad of athletes. It will be remembered that last year, when the Red Birds started their big slump from first to fourth place, Herman Bell was sent to Rochester and through most of the remaining months of the campaign there were not as many players on the roster as the law permitted.

"We did not operate with a small squad for any economic reason," Rickey explained. "Normally I believe in operating with as many players as the rules permit. But when players are not available who will help you in the pennant fight, there is no advantage in swelling your roster and crowding your bench. Last year we certainly would have called in players if we had been able to get any who would have helped us.

"You speak of Herman Bell having been sent to Rochester. He was released because Southworth, then manager of the club, said he did not plan to use Bell any more as a pitcher. We did not send him to Rochester to help that club, but because Southworth did not want Bell for the Cards.

"Of course, you must remember that each farm club, especially Rochester and Houston, is a separate unit. Once a season is under way, we do not intend to break up Rochester or Houston. That would not be right. Perhaps there were players at Rochester and Houston who might have helped the Cardinals, but there is an obligation to the minor league cities which we do not take lightly.

"I have been working on a plan for several years and if I can put it over it will mean much to the Cardinals. I would like to use all eight options permitted by major league law to place emergency reserves with minor league clubs which are not owned or operated by the Cardinal organization. I would like to put two catchers, two pitchers, two infielders and two outfielders with minor league clubs on option, subject to recall on one day's notice. There again the problem of quality confronts us. We must take care of Rochester and Houston first, but when we have the players to option in that way we will have the best possible insurance against emergencies. Then if a pitcher or a catcher or an infielder or an outfielder is injured, we can recall the needed player. But that won't do us any good unless the players thus optioned have the quality."

More About Hallahan.

INASMUCH as Gabby Street places so much reliance in Bill Hallahan's ability to win for the Cards next season and tendency in some quarters to discount the importance of his four September victories, Rickey was asked what he thought about Wild William. Mention was made of the fact that Bill had gone until September before winning and that perhaps he would find it tougher in April, May and June, when a pennant might be at stake.

"That doesn't make any difference to Hallahan," Rickey declared. "He doesn't care whether he's pitching against the Athletics or the Cubs or a municipal team. It's not a question of confidence with Hallahan.

"Look at his record. He walked a man every inning in the spring with every club that ever had him. Houston was about ready to send him away as a hopeless case. But the club was short of pitchers. Frank Snyder had to work him, and what did he do? He won a pennant for Houston; that's what he did.

"Hallahan has to be pitched. Last spring in the exhibition games in the South nothing was at stake. But Hallahan was wild. He's wild every spring. He has to be pitched. And if Street pitches him he will get control. He would have won last year if he had been pitched. He can't acquire control on the bench. But if he is pitched regularly, regardless of how many bases on balls he issues, he will gain control and he will be a winner."

WRAY'S COLUMN

L., so the record shows, fought only 13 times before he beat Paddy Ryan in nine rounds for the championship.

Takes Time to Make Champs.

HOWEVER, there is something else to be considered, namely, the elapsed time from the beginning of the careers of Jeff and Jawn L. up to their championship victories, and the time that was spent in learning how to box. Whereas Carnera has been only a few months in the fight game, it was FOUR YEARS after his first bout before Jeffries fought for the title—and won it. Sullivan prepared himself for FIVE years.

It was not as easy to arrange fights in those days. Communication was much slower. Backers were few and flighty. Men could not agree on time, place or referee; and, on top of it all, the Sheriffs were only a step behind the promoters of those illegal bouts of earlier days. But title hopes spent a lot of time in gymnasiums or in helping to train champions then, thus gaining a knowledge of the game.

Carnera will miss all that; and the task of shaping him up for a real fight in a short time seems extremely difficult. If he can escape destruction for the next three months, there will be real hope for him.

Jeffries Very Green.

JIM JEFFRIES wasn't such an accomplished boxer, even at the time he was fighting the tough boys of his day and preparing for the title. Tommy Ryan, the middleweight champion, was hired to teach Jeffries how to box, but gave it up as a bad job. Ryan did teach Jeffries the famous "crouch" in which Jeff bent over extending his left hand, hiding his jaw behind his hunched up shoulder, covering his body with his right.

That crouch, plus a tremendous left-hand punch, was about all the science Jeffries needed.

Perhaps Carnera, with his tremendous body resistance, will be able to take the punishment and come on to win by sheer brute strength, as Jeffries did.

Building for a Title.

RECORDS of previous champions afford an interesting comparison as to the number of preparatory fights and the elapsed time they spent in developing themselves up to the championship quality. Here are the records of the various heavyweights who have held the crown in modern times:

CHAMPION.	Pre-Title Fights.	Years Preparation.
Sullivan	13	5
Corbett	24	6
Fitzsimmons	*37	16
Jeffries	10	4
Marvin Hart	35	7
Tom Burns	37	6
Johnson	66	10
Willard	31	5
Dempsey	63	6
Tunney	*65	8

*Both had several unrecorded fights: Fitz in Australia, Tunney in the army.

Thus, if actual fighting experience counted, the more modern fighters were the best prepared for their championship encounters, by reason of more fights and actual ring experience against a wider range of competition.

How valuable that experience can be was shown in the case of Tunney, who, in 1921, was a tyro and who by 1926 had built himself up in body and skill to the point where he defeated Dempsey.

30-GAME SCHEDULE FOR PRO BASKET LEAGUE IN ITS SECOND HALF

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 11.—Owners of American League basketball clubs, meeting here today, decided that the six clubs would play 30 games each in the second half of the season.

They cleared up several minor points on rules. Return of the franchise to the New York club was refused.

No deals were completed, although Fort Wayne was angling for new players.

The representatives of the Syracuse club, whose franchise was forfeited a short time ago, tried to persuade the owners to permit it to keep the money which would be realized on the sale of the Syracuse players. The league did not agree, declaring all the Syracuse men free agents.

DICK SHIKAT TO MEET KERILENKO AT COLISEUM FRIDAY NIGHT

Dick Shikat, German heavyweight matman, who is recognized by the New York and Pennsylvania Athletic Commissions as world champion of his division, will meet Matros Kerilenko of Russia in a one-fall finish bout, announced last night by Promoter Tom Packs, as the main event of a wrestling show to be held at the New Coliseum next Friday night.

Shikat accepted terms for the bout after Seneca Taylor, local member of the State Athletic Commission, turned down the German grappler's demand that the match be contested over a longer distance, best two-out-of-three falls to decide the winner.

Taylor advised Shikat that he would be barred from wrestling in Missouri if he failed to fulfill the agreement he made with Promoter Packs several weeks ago, when he promised to take on the winner of a return engagement between Kerilenko and the Memphis heavyweight, Rudy Dusek.

The telegram Packs received at that time from Joe "Toots" Mondt, manager of Shikat, contained no objection to the one-fall limit regulation favored by the Missouri Commission.

Shikat established his claim to the world championship last summer, when he met and defeated Hannes Steinke, a ponderous German rival, who previously had been recognized by the New York Commission as the heavyweight champion. Steinke had posted $2500 with the commission to guarantee his acceptance of matches with Ed "Strangler" Lewis, Gus Sonnenberg or any other claimant of the title.

The National Boxing Association now proposes to sponsor a series of elimination tourneys to determine the grapplers worthy of recognition as champions of the various divisions ranging from welterweight to heavyweight. John Pesek of Nebraska, Jimmy Londos, the Americanized Greek grappler; Pete Sauer of Seattle (who wrestles sometimes under the name of Roy Steele), Gus Sonnenberg and Shikat are the N. B. A. selections for the heavyweight eliminations.

Steele will appear in a preliminary event on Friday night's card, matching grips with George Hagen of New York City, a former U. S. Marine Corps champion, in a one-fall bout to be contested as the semiwindup and limited to one hour. Hagen made his local debut a month ago in a bout with Londos, who defeated him in an hour and 16 minutes.

Steele won over Jack Sampson of Chicago and Fred Grobmeier of Minneapolis in his only engagements here this season. The Seattle heavyweight evidently achieved his recognition by the N. B. A. as a result of victories he scored in recent bouts with Nick Lutze, Jim Clinstock, Paul Jones and Dick Daviscourt at Los Angeles.

After beating Lutze, Steele posted $2500 with the California Athletic Commission to back up challenges to Sonnenberg, Shikat and Lewis.

ROYAL SABLE DEFEATS TITLE OAK AND ATHOS IN SPRINT AT HAVANA

HEAVILY PLAYED FAVORITE WINS DASH WITH FINE STRETCH DRIVE

By the Associated Press.

HAVANA, Jan. 11.—Sudden and unexpected showers this morning during training hours, slowed up the track at Oriental Park, but as the morning wore on the sun worked wonders with the going and it was almost fast at post time. Trainers besieged the office during the showers and scratches were so numerous in the fifth and seventh races that the originals were declared off and substitutes prepared.

The Maceo Park, dash of five and one-half furlongs for 3-year-olds was offered as the feature. The event went to H. C. Hatch's Royal Sable, which was backed almost to the exclusion of every other starter in the race. Royal Sable turned in one of the best efforts, came from the rear and wore down the pace-makers that had set a fast and early pace. He drew away at the finish. Royal Sable was ridden by R. Townrow, and led home O. L. Foster's Title Oak and E. Zely's Athos, which finished in the order named.

The start of this event was excellent. Donora and Purple Robe were the quickest to draw away and raced along lapped for the first quarter. Then Title Oak, which was in third position, moved up with a rush. Royal Sable, which had broken in his stride, dropped back for the first part, but when fully settled in his stride improved his position steadily. Rounding the turn Title Oak displaced the leaders.

Purple Robe dropped back steadily. Townrow brought Royal Sable to the outside of the leaders in the stretch and closed with a rush. Athos, which was away slowly, worked his way courageously on the inside and was a rapid-going third.

"Long Shot" McCoy Is Only Prominent Jockey Who Wears Spectacles

By DENT McSKIMMING.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 11.—"Long Shot" Jimmy McCoy is an unique figure among jockeys. He has a dual claim to fame. First, he rode the record long price winner at New Orleans several years ago—Rock Candy, which paid $452.40 for $2. Second, he is the only jockey of prominence who wears glasses during a race.

McCoy spent two solid weeks in what he calls a "dungeon" while being treated for an eye injury about eight years ago, and when he recovered full use of his eye he bethought himself some means of avoiding another accident. Hence the glasses.

"I was riding a horse named Secret Greeting," said McCoy in explaining how he started wearing specs. "We were up in the thick of the field, nearing the three-eighths pole when something cracked me in the left eye. I came to my senses with my horse stopped and myself standing up in the stirrups, just past the three-eighths pole. My left eye was closed. The rock or clump of hard mud or whatever it was that some horse had kicked up had hit me so hard it knocked me unconscious. A blood vessel had burst in the eye. I was confined to a 'dungeon' or dark room for two weeks.

"I was a bit timid when I got back into the saddle but as soon as I got hold of a pair of goggles my fear of injury to my eyes disappeared."

McCoy exhibited a pair of glasses he has been wearing for several months. The lenses were nicked and deeply scratched where mud and sand particles had cut across them. The glasses resemble automobile goggles, light in weight. The lenses are flat, unground.

"LONG SHOT" McCOY.

McCoy has convinced other jockeys that the glasses are helpful and several have tried them, including Johnny Callahan, who wore them until he retired from the saddle. One boy wore them at the Kentucky tracks last fall.

McCoy is 27 years old, is married and has two children. He has never ridden at Fairmount but will probably be there this summer.

NINES AND FIVES TO PLAY SOCCER AT THE ARENA

The DiSalvo team of Gillespie, Ill., and the Hellrung and Grimms of the St. Louis Soccer League, clubs which may meet later in a U. S. F. A. cup elimination, will clash at The Arena Thursday in the second night game of the season.

The Central Council of the Municipal Athletic Association has granted permission for the Kolsters, leaders in the Fairground No. 2 Division, and the Academy A. C. of the Sherman Park Division to meet in a preliminary match.

As a second preliminary a contest between "soccer fives" will be played. The game between soccer fives had its origin in Scotland and England, where as the close of each season, the five fastest men are selected from each team to participate in a championship series.

Following are the lineups of the two fives selected for the Arena contest:

A-Five Team.	Position.	B-Five Team.
E. Gallagher, Cook A. C.	Goal.	B. Branconier, Schenbergs, goal.
B. Chartrand, Majestic	R.F.B.	D. O'Connell, Kolsters—R.F.B.
W. Scullin, Angelicas	L.F.B.	J. Doyal, Longo, R.F.B.
J. Roe, Marre	L.H.B.	T. Mitchell, We, L.H.B.
R. McGinn, Cook A. C.	C.H.B.	O. Branconier, Schenbergs, C.H.B.

In the first night soccer game held last month at The Arena, there was a congested condition at times that marred the opportunity for individual and team play and for this reason it was decided to reduce the teams to nine men, the center forward and center halfback being eliminated.

LOS ANGELES AND MAJESTIC FIVES PLAY WEDNESDAY

With the fifth week of the schedule in the Men's Municipal Basketball League getting under way Monday evening, the season will have reached the half-way mark and the attendance as reported by the office of the league has been the largest in a number of years. In order to accommodate the large crowds at the Sherman Park Community Center gymnasium the Municipal Athletic Association has purchased and installed portable bleachers which practically surround the two playing courts at the center and are now providing seating facilities for some 1100 spectators.

This week's schedule provides a number of thrilling games. Outstanding is the battle for first place in the novel two-team league of the Wednesday night open division, where the Majestic and Los Angeles teams, after four games, are tied for first place.

The game is set for 8 o'clock and in order to accommodate the largest number of spectators, children under 16 will be barred unless they are accompanied by some older person. The standings of the teams follow:

colt, dark brown in color, almost black. He is by Paul Weidel-Audrey Austin. L. M. Severson owns the colt and Frector trains him.

The day's racing was conducted over a dry, fast track. Rain and cold weather which had been predicted for several days, did not materialize and the day was not at all unpleasant. About 8000 persons attended.

The other races on the program with the exception of the sixth were easy for the winners. St. Matthews took the opener by three lengths, West Wind was victor in the second by two lengths, Taddywawa won the third by a length and a half and Reveille Boy took the fifth by two lengths. Stars and Bars nosed out Leyland to win the sixth. Bourbon was the winner of the final race of the day, paying $37.60 for $2 to win. Stars and Bars refunded $19.50.

MAPLEWOOD WINS FROM WELLSTON IN LEAGUE GAME

Maplewood High School's basketball team added another league victory to its string by defeating Wellston High School at Wellston last night, 17 to 11. Maplewood now has a record of five victories and no defeats in the County League. The defeat gave Wellston a record of two games won and one lost.

The game was marked by close guarding in the opening half which closed with Maplewood leading, 6 to 4. At the start of the second half play became rough and Houston, Wellston captain, was forced out of the game by committing four fouls.

Kerr was high point scorer for Maplewood, while Wellston's leading player was Craig, who shot two field goals and dropped in two free throws.

Concordia Gains 37-20 Victory Over McKendree

With Werling, center, and Bill Reuter in the game despite injuries, the Concordia Seminary basketball team defeated McKendree College of Lebanon, Ill., at the Armory last night, 37 to 20. It was McKendree's second visit here this season, having recently lost to St. Louis U.

An injured ankle did not stop Brauer, speedy Concordia forward, and he topped the scorers with 12 points, scored five field goals and two free throws. Reuter, as usual, starred at the guard position, the McKendree forwards getting few close shots at the basket.

Concordia opened up at the start of the game and quickly took the lead. At the end of the half the score was Concordia 14, McKendree 8. Beginning of the second half, the Concordia forwards went on a rampage and scored field goals with ease.

Hubbel, giant McKendree center, was easily the star of the visitors, although he was taken out shortly before the end of the game. Hubbel scored 11 points for his team. Clayton, Pressler, Ropiequet and Saunders scored the other points.

Account was under stout restraint in the run down the back stretch and, under mediocre handling, made a game bid to catch the winner in the last quarter, but was not good enough. Theorist Jane never threatened the first two, but was much too good for the others.

The Kindergarten event, third on the card, was a hard task for the starters, as it was 16½ minutes before the youngsters were finally sent on their way. L. Womack's Flying Ace, the favorite, was the winner by a nose, followed by the Labrea Stable's Yogano and the Agua Caliente Stable's Golden Oriole.

Silver Skates Ice Carnival Again Postponed

The Silver Skates ice carnival, originally scheduled for two weeks ago and postponed until today, was again postponed yesterday, after officers of the Missouri Skating Association and the Park Department inspected the ice. After the examination it was announced that in view of the enormous crowd that would attend, it was deemed advisable not to risk accidents, although the ice was of the required thickness, in places.

Official announcement was made that the event would be held on Sunday, Jan. 19, ice conditions permitting.

Preparations are still going forward to make the event a bigger success than ever before, according to Oscar Blankenmeister, vice president of the Missouri Skating Association. The Stover Athletic Club of Detroit is assisting St. Louis officials, to the end that Loretta Nietzel, the world's fastest woman skater and holder of the U. S. championship and three world titles; Melvin Johnson of the Northwest Skating Association, Edd Wedge, Percy Johnston, Richard Smythe, Marie Brady and other famous skaters will be seen here as soon as the ice permits holding the carnival.

The Springfield (Ill.) Department of Recreation has announced that it will hold its annual ice carnival on Feb. 2 and that as usual a group of St. Louis skaters will be invited to enter.

Her 13 free tosses led the league in that department. Miss Kendrick's 12 field goals rank her first in scoring from the field.

Teresa Mullen of the Bachelors is gradually gaining on the "foul title" and is now tied with Marie Madison of Crystal City with 15 miscues.

In team scoring, the Crystal City Champions head the list in field goals with 40, and are first in total points, with 113. They likewise have committed the greatest number of fouls, 74. The Bachelors' 36 free throws rank three points better than Crystal's total.

The Young Men's Hebrew Association basketball team defeated the Downtown Y. M. C. A. five at the Y. M. H. A. gymnasium last night, 26 to 23.

As the score indicates, the game was close all the way. At the end of the first half the Downtown Y. M. C. A. team led, 11 to 9. But at the start of the second half, Y. M. H. A. evened the count and then went out in front. Two minutes before the close of the contest, Brimmer tied the count then Jacobson, the Y. M. H. A. center, sank a field goal to break the tie

SENATORS GO TO BILOXI, TIGERS TAKE THEIR PLACE AT TAMPA CAMP

By Herman Wecke

Florida, as has been the case in the past several seasons, will draw a bulk of the major league clubs, when the athletes depart for the spring training camps late next month. In all, a total of 10 of the 16 clubs, will train in the Everglade State; two will go to California; two to Texas, one to Mississippi and one to Louisiana.

Both of the St. Louis clubs will go to Florida. The Browns will remain at West Palm Beach, while the Cardinals, after two years at Avon Park, will go back to their first Florida love—Bradenton. The Cardinals' change to Bradenton will be the only shift in the training camps in the National League.

Senators to Biloxi.

There are several changes in the American. Detroit, after one spring in Arizona, have found the lure of Florida too strong and will train at Tampa, the old-time camp of Washington club. The Senators, after many springs at Tampa, will go through the early conditioning processes at Biloxi, Miss. The tied Sox, after a year at Bradenton, move to Pensacola, where Sunday baseball is permitted under a local option law.

The 1930 spring training camps of the major league clubs follow:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.
Browns—West Palm Beach, Fla.
Athletics—Fort Myers, Fla.
Detroit—Tampa, Fla.
Red Sox—Pensacola, Fla.
Cleveland—New Orleans, La.
Yankees—St. Petersburg, Fla.
White Sox—San Antonio, Tex.
Washington—Biloxi, Miss.

NATIONAL LEAGUE.
Cardinals—Bradenton, Fla.
Phillies—Winter Haven, Fla.
Reds—Orlando, Fla.
Cubs—Catalina Island, Cal.
Pittsburg—Paso Robles, Cal.
Braves—St. Petersburg, Fla.
Giants—San Antonio, Tex.
Brooklyn—Clearwater, Fla.

The training camp sites of the major league clubs show that two of the Southern cities will have two teams in training. This is true of St. Petersburg, Fla., where the Yankees and Braves will again go through the paces. Then San Antonio will have two teams this spring with the Giants and White Sox doing early work in the Lone Star State city. As a result of this, the Giants and White Sox will make a tour, playing exhibition contests in various cities. This series between the men of McGraw and Bush will open in Texas and go merrily on its way all the way north with the final battle at Chicago, April 14. In all, the clubs will play 16 games. The planned invasion of the two clubs to Mexico is very much in doubt. As yet no contests have been scheduled for across the border.

Browns to Play Minor Teams.

With 10 teams in Florida, there will again be a heavy list of exhibitions in which the major league teams will figure. The only club which will not engage heavily in these "Grape Fruit League" battles is St. Louis of the American League. Most of the Browns' exhibitions are with minor teams.

Hot Dogs With a Bark, Peanuts With A Whistle, at Sportsman's Park in 1930

HI! ANEMIC BOXOFFICITIS; A GOOD, HEAVY DIET OF TURTLE RACES, AUTO RAFFLES AND HOT DOG SALES AND YOU'LL BE OUT OF THE RED IN A WEEK

He was doctor to sick minor league clubs.

Blake Harper, New Operator of Concessions, Promises Bigger and Better Snacks for Baseball Fans.

By J. Roy Stockton

BLAKE HARPER, who for 10 years has been rushing here and there in the minor leagues, applying the pulmotor whenever a club has shown symptoms of a weak box office heart, has graduated to the majors as commander-in-chief of the peanuts and hot dogs at Sportsman's Park, and don't ever believe for a moment that Blake will permit his job to be anything but a highly important and colorful one.

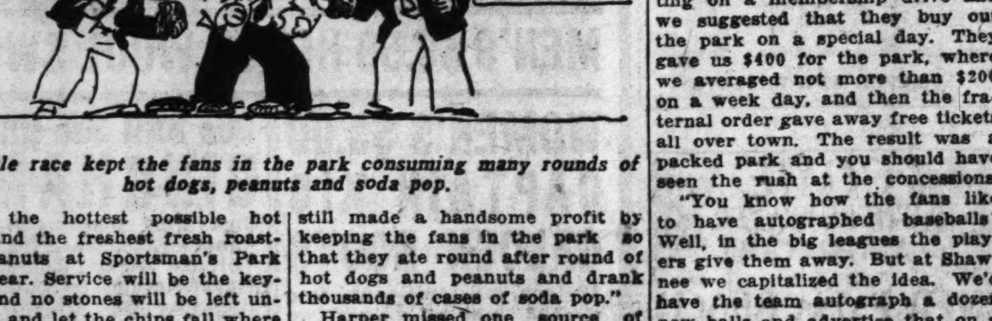
Harper is a dynamo. He is Old Man Color, himself, and so Cardinal and Brownie fans can expect to see many innovations at Grand and Dodier when the hot dogs begin to call their mates and the peanuts put on their annual red hot roast.

It will be made an important job. Harper is that way. He takes hold of things. His earliest recollection is of trying to tell his nurse maid how to wheel the baby carriage. And he has been a positive active force all his life.

The "White Kitchen" Plan.

Even when Blake was interviewed for this story he quickly took charge.

"Yes, you might make a fair yarn out of this," he said. "Let's see, you'd better start this way: 'The good people of St. Louis can expect the hottest possible hot dogs and the freshest fresh roasted peanuts at Sportsman's Park next year. Service will be the keynote and no stones will be left unturned and let the chips fall where they may, the fans will get the best service that money can buy. They also are invited to make suggestions and they can rest assured that every communication will be treated with the utmost courtesy. They also are cordially invited to visit our park any morning and see the peanuts being roasted and the hot dogs being prepared for the heat. We welcome inspection of our establishment.'



COME ON YOU HIRAM JONES SHOW SOME SPEED!
A LITTLE PEP THERE—YOU'RE NOT RUNNING AT FAIRMOUNT

A turtle race kept the fans in the park consuming many rounds of hot dogs, peanuts and soda pop.

"Now you've got a good start and I believe you can make a good story out of it. I may give you a good slogan or two later. Understand, I don't want any publicity out of this. But if you care to give my peanuts or my hot dogs a few kind words, I will appreciate it for their sakes."

First Aid to the Minors.

Harper finally was persuaded to discuss some of the tricks of his trade as doctor to sick minor league clubs and the conclusion was that a minor league baseball president of today might do well to take a course with Barnum and Bailey and a little post-graduate work with a Wild West show, before taking up his duties.

"Yes, the days have passed when baseball alone was enough to draw fans to ball parks in the small minor league towns," Harper explained. "For instance, I was president of the Shawnee club of the Western Association last year and while at Ponca City I saw a turtle race sponsored by a Wild West show. The event, with prizes ranging up to $75,000, attracted a capacity crowd to a vast stadium and I conceived the idea of using a turtle race to help our baseball club.

"The event was advertised and we held the race on a Sunday afternoon, when we also had a double-header scheduled. We held the preliminaries before the first game and then the finals after the game and whereas ordinarily a crowd of 500 would have been good, we attracted an overflow crowd of 3500."

The Turtles Got in Free!

"But why did you hold the race on a double-header day? Why not save one of the games for another day?" Blake was asked.

"That's exactly the point you missed," he explained. "We wanted the big crowd and we wanted them to stay all afternoon. The fans began to gather at noon and we kept them all through the afternoon and the way we wore out the cash registers at the concessions was nobody's business. We gave prizes amounting to $200 and still made a handsome profit by keeping the fans in the park so that they ate round after round of hot dogs and peanuts and drank thousands of cases of soda pop."

Harper missed one source of revenue at the turtle race that he never would overlook again. That was the turtle concession itself. Boys scoured the desert land near Shawnee for land terrapins and brought wagonloads of them to the park, selling them at the gate for 50 cents each. The fans scratched their names on the shells and all the turtles were released in the center of a 40-foot ring near home plate. The first turtle to cross the circle line won the event.

Next time, Harper explained, he would hire boys to find the turtles and make a profit on the sale at the gate.

Old Mother Necessity.

"You have to be ready for all emergencies," Harper continued. "One day an umpire called a game in the fourteenth inning, without consulting us and as it was not dark enough to necessitate such action, the fans were angry about it. So, as they were leaving the park, my announcers shouted that on the next day there would be an absolutely free gate, everybody admitted without charge. The result was that a capacity crowd filled the park and we cleaned up on our concessions. You pay the visiting club $100 a day in that league, so we made a fine profit.

"We had one ladies' day a week out there, but I got some people to suggest more of them and then agreed to give three extra ladies' days each week, with the provision that a cushion, bought from our concession outside the park, would be a badge of admission for each woman. The ladies took to the idea and we had more of them on the cushion days than on the day when they could get in without a cushion.

"Another stunt was the giving away of automobiles. We'd save the stubs of tickets, with the fans' names written on them, and occasionally we'd advertise an automobile day, charge $1 admission instead of 50 and 75 cents and give an auto to the person whose ticket stub was pulled out of a barrel. We gave away 11 automobiles during the season and made a lot of money out of the idea.

For Sale—a Ball Game.

"Then a fraternal order was putting on a membership drive and we suggested that they buy out the park on a special day. They gave us $400 for the park, where we averaged not more than $200 on a week day, and then the fraternal order gave away free tickets all over town. The result was a packed park and you should have seen the rush at the concessions.

"You know how the fans like to have autographed baseballs? Well, in the big leagues the players give them away. But at Shawnee we capitalized the idea. We'd have the team autograph a dozen new balls and advertise that on a certain day we'd give them away. That helped make the turnstiles click.

"And that wasn't all. When a club in the league needed money to pay expenses we'd call on a carnival company, working on a percentage basis, get the leading citizens to sell tickets and we always made enough that way to keep the clubs going.

"Of course, you can't do those things in the major leagues. But you better handle the story this way: Say that major league fans have no idea of how much work is done for them to keep minor league clubs alive, so players will be developed for the big league clubs. Doubles Classic at Heidel's.

A two-man classic, open to all bowlers of St. Louis and vicinity, will be held at Frank Heidel's alleys, Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 15 and 16. The classic will be over a six-game route instead of the customary eight. Heidel's contention being that many bowlers tire too much over the eight-game route. In the first event of eight games held at Heidel's, 106 bowlers filed entries, while the second tournament, over the six-game route, drew 132 tenpinners. Entry fee is $5 per man, with squads starting at 2 o'clock Saturday and 1 o'clock Sunday. Lee Martin and Forest Beye won last year's meet with a score of 2508.

A scratch mixed doubles classic will be held at the Cinderella alleys next Sunday. Bowlers are requested to bring their own partners. Four games will be bowled across eight alleys, with the first squad taking the drives at 8 o'clock. Entry fee is $3, including bowling. A special prize will be donated by the Cinderella alleys for high single.

The Gravois Recreation Parlor will hold a mixed doubles scratch tourney at their alleys next Saturday evening at 8 o'clock. Each bowler is requested to bring a partner. Entry fee is $1.60, including bowling. Entries can be filed by calling LAclede 0531.

The Congress Alley team will take on the Melene team on the Congress Alleys at 3 o'clock. The Congress five, which has rolled more match games this season than any team in the city, will present their regular lineup, consisting of Ollie Weber, John Heibel, Dr. S. Bernal, Syl Heibert and Ben Cohen, while the Melene will show Al Juengst, George Heibel, Walter Pfeiffer, John Esser and J. Friesmeyer. The third event of the day will be another five-man match at 6 o'clock between the Congress team and the Banner Sodas. This match will also be rolled on the Congress Alleys.

The South Side Chevrolets, leading bowling team of this city, turned in a 3100 total in the Washington Scratch League Thursday evening to win three games. In their last two league matches the South Sides have averaged 1054. Roy Flesh did the heavy work Thursday for the South Sides in their match with the Washington Five, rolling 671. Andy Leicht shot 651, Wilson 638, Duchek 575 and Kastner 565. Other league results were: Tablers 2, Golden Eagles 1; Hermanns 2, Knapps 1; Missouri Floors 2, Kassings 1. Fehligs Set Record.

The Fehligs established a new team single record in the St. Louis Hoo Hoo Club League on the Arway alleys, rolling 1014. Schake, of the Hill-Behans, shot 265 in the first game, but fell one pin short of the league record, which is held by A. L. Schaefering. Three teams are deadlocked for first place in the league—the Goodfellows, Fehligs and Boecklers winning 30 games each. The Hill-Behans are fourth, one game behind. League records are held by the Carr-Twombleys, Ed Rohrmann, Schaefering and W. Wolters.

Results in the Hoo Hoo League were as follows: Steels 3, Thellings 0; Goodfellows 3, Seidels 0; Thomas 2, Nabers 1; Uniteds 2, Wiles-Chipmans 1; Fehligs 2, Imses 1; Boecklers 2, Gideons 1; Huttigs 2, Carrs 1; St. Louis Lumber 2, Hills 1. GREAT DEFENSE HAS FEATURED PLAY OF SOCCER CUP SURVIVORS

With the postponement of today's matches in the St. Louis Soccer League because of poor field conditions, local fans will have to wait another week before being able to form an opinion regarding the merits of the Hellrungs and Tablers, local survivors in the national challenge cup competition. These two elevens will meet in the feature game next Sunday, with the Ben Millers battling the Madisons in the other.

A great defense has been one of the main features of the play of the Hellrungs and Tablers this season. This has been especially true of the Hellrungs since the eleven overcame its early season slump. Brady's men have come so fast that right now the team is regarded as the best in the circuit, although at present tied for second place with the Tablers, present city champions. The clubs have also shown some fine combination play.

Fine Fullbacks.

Both the Hellrungs and Tablers boast a fine set of fullbacks. There is more experience in the Hellrung back line, because of Jimmy Nolan, who was a great halfback before he dropped back because of a bad knee. Nolan plays more on the order of Tate Brady, when that athlete was the best in the city, than any other man in the circuit. He can go into a scrimmage, come out clean with the ball and tap it forward so that it will be of the most assistance to his club on attack. Hebberger, his running mate, was only a fair halfback, but has developed rapidly as a fullback. He is of the rushing type, who breaks up numerous plays.

As for the Tabler pair, Carl Dorley and Mike McGirl are the best youngsters developed in many years. Both were in the Muny League a year ago, Dorley with the Finans and McGirl with the Russells. Dorley is the more spectacular. He owns a tremendous boot, is fast and gets into all plays. But McGirl is not far behind. Neither has as yet learned to control his kick so that it would work to more advantage of his club than just a mere clearing of the sphere.

The halfback lines of the rivals have found the advantage of working with the forwards. In Bill Lehman, at center, the Hellrungs have one of the best in the league. He is not only a tower of strength on defense, but is dangerous on offensive. Very rarely is he guilty of wild kicking. Kane, who plays the position for the Tablers, always was rated as a defensive star, but last week, when the men of Marre defeated the Millers in a cup match, he proved that he could shine on offensive as well. In O'Hara and Tuvil or Hatchard, Lehman has some fine assistants, while the same is true of Benoist and Schweppe or Claeys, the Tabler wing halfbacks.

Speed and Punch.

There is plenty of speed and punch on the forward lines. Both attacking forces are capable of a fine passing game and both have found that it pays to give the ball to the wingmen to advance down field into the danger zone. When Harry Ratican is at center for the Tablers, the Hellrungs will easily outspeed their rivals, but with Cronin replacing Ratican there is little difference. Jack O'Reilly, the Hellrung center, has developed into a star. He can dribble, pass and shoot. What's more, he's always aggressive, getting in on every play. Having played college football, spills mean nothing in his young life. He gets up and goes faster than ever.

Lou Ahrens and Eddie Hart, the Hellrung inside men, are capable of reaching great heights. Ahrens is a great dribbler and can pack a ball down field with the best of them. Hart is a bit more dangerous around the goal. Bochnicek of the Tablers, like Ahrens, is a ball hawk, while "Dinty" Moore on the other side, is the leading goal scorer in league matches. Moore is fast and can carry a ball as well as shoot goals.

On the wings, Tate Brady has two of the best youngsters in the league in Pastor and O'Shaughnessy. Both are fast and realize the need of playing their positions properly. They have learned the advantage of crossing the ball to center at the right time and each is a dangerous goal shot. Little need be said of Al McHenry, outside right of the Tablers. He's been a star for lo these many years and appears as good as ever. Buddy Brengle, on the other side, is a rover, but has speed to burn and is dangerous. Gene McAuliffe is a fine youngster to have around.

Bertel, a youngster, with the Hellrungs and Dueker are a fine pair of "goalies."

A meeting between the two rivals in a cup match should result in some of the best soccer witnessed in St. Louis in many days.

Lose Telegraphic Pin Meet.

In the fourth telegraphic match of the month, the local Postal Telegraph team lost to Milwaukee, 2329 to 2301. The Milwaukee team won two games. Local scores were: Keith 494, Seewald 411, Brady 481, Kramer 466, and Miller 449. Krueger was high for the winners with 576.

Dykes' Clean Steal of Home, Although Disallowed, Great Play of Series, Says McGraw

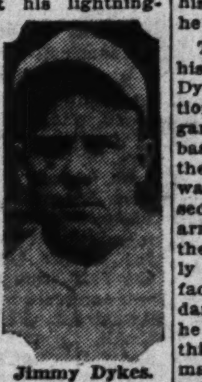
THIS is the second of a series of 10 articles by John McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, in which the dean of National League pilots analyzes the 10 outstanding plays in the 1929 world series. These articles will appear each Sunday in the Post-Dispatch.

By John J. McGraw,
Manager, New York Giants.

In many ways Jimmy Dykes, in the big series proved himself one of the real thinking ball players of recent years. More than that, he displayed that quality so priceless to a manager—a highly developed competitive spirit.

It cannot be said that Dykes is a sensational infielder nor is he fleet of foot but his lightning-like brain work can offset many a pair of legs that are faster.



Jimmy Dykes.

An essential factor in any championship fight is constant alertness and I don't believe Dykes missed the slightest move in that entire series.

It was this alertness on his part and a game, daring spirit that made him pull one of the smartest plays ever seen in a world's championship series—an outstanding one that is still talked about—even though it was wasted.

To me one of the very great thrills of the series was Dykes' clean steal of home in the second inning of the third game played at Philadelphia. The run did not count because the batter was called out on strikes but that does not lessen the greatness of the play.

There were two out at the time and Boley was on second. Dykes on third. It was evident that Root was at top form and pitching air-tight ball. With Earnshaw, a pitcher, at bat, there seemed little chance of a run. To make certain of his control, Root began taking his full wind up, pretty sure that he could watch Dykes at third.

The very moment Root dropped his arms for the big windup, Dykes' eagle eye caught the motion and the intent. Though regarded but ordinarily fast on the bases, Jimmy began edging toward the plate. We could see what he was up to from the stand. The second that Root drew his long arm back, Dykes made a dash for the plate, slid well under the slowly delivered ball and was safe. In fact, the umpire, surprised by the daring play, called him safe. Then he remembered that it was the third strike on Earnshaw, which made the third out. Naturally, the brilliant play was wasted, but no one will ever forget that daring dash and slide by Dykes.

The point of greatness is that Dykes saw Root's move in a flash and took advantage of it. Though I was pulling for Root, I couldn't help feeling sorry for Dykes. He had certainly done his part. My sympathy was probably increased because exactly the same thing happened to me in a game against Chicago in 1900—nearly 30 years ago. I was on third base, and when I saw the pitcher make his move I made a clean steal of home, only to have Hank O'Day, the umpire, call Sudhoff out on strikes just as I slid across the plate.

ADMISSION PRICES TO BEARS' GAMES LOWERED

A lower scale of admission will be charged to Washington University basketball games at the Washington Field House in all future games, with the exception of St. Louis U. and the University of Oklahoma, it was announced yesterday. The admission will be 75c instead of $1, the standard admission price in recent years. The above two games will remains at the od price.

End section seats sell at as low as 25 cents for most of the games, Arthur Eilers, business manager of athletics revealed.

The new scale of prices is being tried, this year, Eilers said, to ascertain if largrer crowds will attend. While the giant Field House is always comfortably filled, the St. Louis U.-Washington games are the only ones that draw capacity houses.

Stein's 844 Total Best Ever Bowled In League Match

OTTO STEIN'S 844 total, bowled in a St. Louis League match at the Washington Alleys last week, was the best ever rolled in a sanctioned league or tournament, according to word received yesterday from A. L. Langtry, secretary of the American Bowling Congress. Included in his big count was a 299, for which Stein will receive a silver medal from the A. B. C.

Record books show Frank Caruana of Buffalo with a three-game count of 847, as a result of individual counts of 300, 300 and 247. However, this was made in a four-man league, which rolls four games, and so does not go into the records as an official score compiled in league competition. It merely is the best ever rolled for three consecutive games.

Two Games This Week in School Hockey League

The Interscholastic Hockey League teams will meet for the second time tomorrow, when McBride and University City High clash in the feature game and Clayton and Normandy will cross sticks in the second contest.

Last week University City defeated Normandy by one goal, while the McBride sextet routed Clayton, 11 to 0. Paul Curtin, veteran center of the Irishmen, made 10 goals unassisted, at times carrying the puck through the entire Clayton six to plant it within the net.

The Irishmen will have no setup this week against the Delmar loop team, whose veterans will easily break up a one-man attack. McBride failed to exhibit the passing attack which characterized their play from the outset of last season, and this likely will bring their downfall.

Normandy, if it exhibits the same brand of play this week as last, should have little difficulty in downing Clayton, which seems to have the least organization of the four teams. However, with an additional week of practice the County Seaters may spring a surprise.

The lineups:

NORMANDY.	Position.	CLAYTON.
Schroeder	G.	Mutrux
Williams	R. D.	Blanke
Deutman	L. D.	Zingeres
Eishman	C.	Hughes
Scott	R. W.	Strickland

McBRIDE.	Position.	UNIV. CITY.
Shelber	G.	Symes
Woods	R. D.	Hamburg
Reyburn	L. D.	Sanders
Curtin	C.	Dubinsky
Durbin	R. W.	Barnes

ACTIVITIES OF BOY SCOUTS

OVERNIGHT CAMP FOR SCOUT LEADERS

Men Who Are Taking Training Course Will Go to Irondale Saturday Evening.

An overnight winter camp for Boy Scout leaders will be held in the Ranger Camp at the Irondale Reservation next Saturday and Sunday, according to William Puffer, educational director of the St. Louis Council. The camp is intended primarily for men taking the current training course in Boy Scout leadership, but any leader who needs attendance at an overnight camp to complete a training requirement may join the party.

In accordance with the training purpose, most of the camp program will be devoted to work on scouting activities, particularly those of outdoor nature. Nature study work, tracking, fire-building and outdoor cooking will be featured. A number of outdoor games also will be played. The trip will be climaxed with a treasure hunt in the woods.

According to present plans, the campers will leave Union Station on a special coach at 6:45 p. m. Saturday, arriving at Irondale about 9 p. m. After a council fire, with stunts and games, the campers will sleep in the open-front shacks of the Ranger Camp. In these shacks mattresses are placed on a pile of leaves lying on the ground, and a fire is built before the open fronts for warmth.

The only time the campers will be indoors will be during meals, which will be eaten in the Renger mess shack. One of the regular camp cooks will prepare al meals. The campers will return to St. Louis Sunday evening.

The camp will be under the direct charge of Field Executive Merle Shipey of the South District, who has been acting as scoutmaster of the training course. Puffer, however, will supervise part of the training activities, while "Skipper" Thompson, head of the Ranger Camp, will assist in the games and treasure hunt.

This camp will be the final meeting of the elementary training class, which was started last October. Leaders who have completed all requirements of the course will receive a training certificate at the next meeting of the Court of Honor.

Two other training courses also are being given by the scout council, one for leaders who have completed the other course, and the other a special class in first aid. Both of these classes will hold meetings this week, the advanced course at the Stix School tomorrow evening and the first-aid course at the Washington University Medical School Wednesday evening. "Troop Administration" will be discussed at the former class by Scout Executive Ward B. Brown of East St. Louis.

Troop Notes

Troop officers for 1930 were announced at the meeting of Troop 26 at the Delmar Baptist Church last week. W. B. Carlton and L. G. Cochran remain as scoutmaster and assistant scoutmaster, respectively, but other officers are new. B. D. Moss Jr. is junior assistant scoutmaster and scribe and Truett McSpadden is senior patrol leader. The other officers are: Treasurer, Robert Tyzzer; quartermaster, George Tooley; patrol leaders, Thayer Damon, Tiger patrol; Robnett Licklider, Buffalo patrol; Tom McConnell, Beaver patrol, and Harry Svatek, Hawk patrol. B. D. Moss is chairman of the troop committee, while other members are H. Goldsworthy, J. P. Licklider, F. H. Smock and Arthur Whorton.

The Hawk patrol is leading in an inter-patrol contest, having 26 points to the second place Buffalos' 21 points. The troop is planning to enter the Pioneering event at the Scout Circus by building a bridge.

"Dad" Reeder has returned as director of the drum and bugle corps at Troop 60, of the Union Avenue Christian Church. The corps held its first meeting of the year last Friday evening, as a start toward preparing for participation in the circus. A hike to the Meramec quarry was taken by the troop a week ago yesterday, to pass tests.

Scout Abe Novack has been re-elected troop reporter by Troop 101 of the West Park Baptist Church. Tickets for the troop's third annual banquet, to be held at the church Feb. 6, were given out last Tuesday evening. Most of the meeting was spent discussing plans for the coming year.

Headquarters Notes.

Instruction classes in signaling for Boy Scouts wishing to pass tests in this subject will be given in each of the four districts next Saturday morning from 10 to 11:30 o'clock. Instruction in all forms of signaling will be given at the Farragut school in the North District, at the Rose Fanning school in the South District, and at the Ben Blewett Junior High school in the West District.

Classes in second class signaling only will be held at the First National Bank, Webster Groves, for Suburban District scouts, while classes in first class signaling will meet at the Webster Groves Trust Co.

The classes are part of a series conducted by the St. Louis Council to help scouts pass tests during the 1930 Achievement Roundup.

Classes in swimming, to assist scouts wishing to pass this first class requirement, will be held at the Beaumont and Roosevelt High school pools at 7:30 p. m. next Thursday, under the joint supervision of the Scout Council and the Red Cross. These classes will be the second of a series to be conducted during January and February, the first having been held at the pools last Thursday evening. Only scouts attempting to qualify for first class rank will be admitted to the pools.

West District.

A joint meeting of Troops 2, 5, 7, 60 and 98, was held at the Kingshighway Presbyterian Church Tuesday evening, to witness a demonstration of the correct use of the axe by Peter McLaren, champion axman of the United States. McLaren also showed a motion picture showing the proper method of felling trees. As a conclusion a woodchopping contest was staged by representatives of the different troops. Arrangements for the meeting were made by Dr. B. Y. Alvis, chairman of the troop committee of Troop 7.

Scout Selwyn Pepper has been appointed patrol leader of the Seneca patrol at Troop 30, which meets at the Y. M. H. A., as Scout Edward Hopper, former patrol leader, is unable to attend meetings regularly. The Navajo patrol was adjudged winner of a contest in decorating the room in which the troop meets, after an inspection at the meeting last Thursday evening. The decorations consisted of patrol bulletin boards, totem poles, pictures, pennants, knotboards and flags, each of the patrols decorating a section of the room with these materials. The Navajos also won first place in inspection. The Sioux and Mohawk patrols tied for first in a knot-tying contest.

Scout David Priwer was in charge of the games at the meeting, while talks on troop activities were given by Scouts Paul Gordon, Frank Gollub and Louis Romansky. Four new members joined the troop during December: Clarence Singer, Bird Carp, Hessel Roberts and Leroy Sachs.

South District.

A celebration in honor of the troop's first anniversary will be held by Troop 168 of St. Pius Church, at the church, Jan. 28, according to Scoutmaster Metzger. A part of the celebration will be an investiture ceremony for tenderfoot scouts. Invitations to attend have been issued to parents and friends of the scouts. Dr. E. E. Heipel has been appointed to the troop committee, in the capacity of medical adviser, while all the other committeemen have been reappointed. The recently organized troop auxiliary gave a party to the scouts and their parents last Wednesday evening.

Six scouts, in uniform, from troop 247, of the Froebel School, distributed food, clothing and toys collected by the troop to a family of 11 Christmas day.

North District.

Twelve scouts and one officer of Troop 3 participated in a joint meeting of all clubs at the Grace Holy Cross Church last Monday evening. Each of the clubs, including the scouts, put on a stunt. The Wolf Patrol won an inter-patrol contest conducted at the regular meeting of the troop last week. A new contest to determine which scouts will carry the troop American flag at the Scout Circus also was started. Among the points of judging in the contest will be neatness of appearance and attendance at meetings in uniform.

A triangle investiture ceremony, to admit four new scouts into the troop, was conducted by Troop 199 of the Nelson Presbyterian Church, Jan. 3. The admission of these boys, Nelson Aitken, Harold Burgess, Eugene Vail and William Klein, completed the quota of new members set by headquarters for the troop's first achievement in the 1930 roundup. The ceremony was conductd by Scoutmaster Jerry Armstrong, Phil Askey and Fred Small. A number of the mothers and fathers of the scouts and several younger brothers witnessed the investiture. The troop committee discussed plans for 1930 at the conclusion of the ceremony.

Suburban District.

A new Boy Scout troop, Manchester 1, is being organized at the Manchester Evangelical Church, under the sponsorship of the Golden Hour Bible class of the church. Walter E. Schumacher has been appointed scoutmaster. The troop will meet at 7:30 o'clock every Thursday evening at the Manchester School. An invitation to join the troop has been sent to all boys of scout age in Manchester.

An achievement interpatrol contest, to advance patrols and scouts in rank, has been started by Troop Thomas Station 1, under the sponsorship of the Wolf and Fox patrols.

SEEKS MORE FREE BEDS FOR TUBERCULAR CASES

Dr. Starkloff Says 400 Are Needed — Waiting List at Koch Sanatorium.

Four hundred additional free hospital beds for tuberculosis cases are needed urgently, says Dr. Max C. Starkloff, city health commissioner.

Although 130 additional hospital beds were provided for tubercular patients in 1929, making a total of 600 free beds, there still is a waiting list of patients, he declared yesterday. He says the Health Department is handicapped by funds and hospital space.

According to the minimum standard set by the National Tuberculosis Association, based on one bed for every death, St. Louis should have about 1600 beds, Dr. Howard H. Bell, city tuberculosis controller, said. Koch Hospital, the municipal tuberculosis sanatorium, is overcrowded and has a long waiting list, he says.

The Health Department is fighting the disease with free clinics and municipal nurses. Twenty-four nurses have been added to the staff within the last two years, eight of them provided by the Tuberculosis and Health Society of St. Louis. Dr. Starkloff estimates that there are about 4000 active tuberculosis cases in St. Louis.

BLIMP CRASHES INTO TREE IN KENTUCKY, TWO UNHURT

Pilot and Navigator Lost in Heavy Fog Did Not Realize Danger.

By the Associated Press.

CAMPTON, Ky., Jan. 11.—Swinging down to avoid the intense cold of higher altitudes, the Goodyear blimp, Puritan, crashed into a tree near here today and ripped its gas bag to pieces but both the occupants escaped unhurt.

The blimp, en route from Akron, O., to Gadsden, Ala., apparently became lost in a heavy fog and earlier reports said it had narrowly missed high tension wires at Ashland, Ky., before it turned southwest again.

The pilot house was not badly damaged and V. L. Smith, pilot, and August C. O'Neil, navigator, climbed out after the crash.

Smith, who came here, said they did not realize they were so near the earth until they felt the crash and landed on a farm about seven miles from here. The motors are thought to be only slightly damaged, as the tree which ripped and tore into the gas bag and deflated it, acted as a brake to stop the blimp.

Pilot Smith walked three miles to a highway, caught a bus and came here for aid in salvaging what parts he could. The mountain roads at this season of the year are impassible for automobiles and wagons.

HUNT FOR KIP RHINELANDER BEGUN IN NEVADA MOUNTAINS

New Yorker, Recently Divorced, Thought to Be Snowbound in Prospector's Cabin.

LANDEGAN, Nev., Jan. 11.—An expedition, led by Harley Harmon, an attorney, is outfitting here today to begin a search of the mountains northeast of here tomorrow for Leonard Kip Rhinelander and two companions, who are thought to be snowbound at Charleston.

Rhinelander, member of a wealthy New York family, who obtained a divorce here recently from his octaroon wife, Alice Rhinelander, left here early this week with two prospectors, J. Simmons and Pat Moody, on a trip to his mountain cabin at Charleston, 25 miles away.

Harmon, who is Rhinelander's attorney, said the men were provisioned with sufficient food to last about four days and had plenty of clothing and blankets.

PRESIDENT BARS UNION MUSICIANS FROM ARENA

They Will Not Be Permitted to Play Until Stagehands Are Reinstated.

Union musicians will not be permitted to play in The Arena, 5700 Oakland avenue, unless stagehands recently discharged are reinstated, according to a notice served on the management by Joseph M. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians, through the local musicians' union yesterday.

The musicians' and stagehands' unions have a working agreement to co-operate in disputes. The Arena stagehands maintain they were discharged because electrical workers complained that they were doing electrical work. Ben G. Brinkman, president of the National Exhibition Co., which owns The Arena, is out of the city. The next event booked for The Arena is the Automobile Show beginning Feb. 3.

FEDERAL RESERVE LIFE FOUND TO BE SOLVENT

Announcement Made by Kansas Officials After Hearing Before Commissioner.

By the Associated Press.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 11.—William A. Smith, Attorney-General, and Charles F. Hobbs, Kansas Commissioner of Insurance, announced today that, after a hearing before the commissioner, the Federal Reserve Life Insurance Co. of Kansas City, Kan., had been found to be solvent.

In a formal statement issued by the two State officials, it was announced that since March 31, 1929, a "contribution of $300,000 has been made to the company."

Attorney-General Smith said the "contribution" was made by Massey Wilson, former president of the company, reported to be in New Jersey.

The statement said that as a result of the hearing this week before Commissioner Hobbs "arrangements were also made whereby certain assets, the soundness of which were questioned, are additionally secured for the benefit of the company."

"The hearing also disclosed that under the new Board of Directors, which was constituted some weeks ago, suits are being prepared and will shortly be filed to collect any moneys which are alleged to have been wrongfully taken from the company," said the statement.

The Attorney-General said he would endeavor to have the State Supreme Court reverse the order of the Wyandotte County District Court appointing a receivership for the company. An appeal from the District Court is pending.

Fashionable Assemblage of St. Louisans Witnesses Marriage of Debutante of Two Seasons Ago and Pittsburg Man.

A FASHIONABLE assemblage of prominent St. Louisans filled St. Peter's Church for the wedding late yesterday afternoon of Miss Kathleen Sheldon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Beaumont Sheldon, 14 Kingsbury place, and Bernard Shea Horne Jr., of Pittsburg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Shea Horne of Princeton, N. J. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Edward Schofield Travers, before an altar simply decorated with vases of Easter lilies and lighted with white tapers.

Miss Janet Gardner preceded the bride as maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Jane Messick, Miss Loraine Grover, Miss Susie Singleton, Miss Dorinda Kennerly, Miss Elinor Munroe of Pittsburg, Mrs. Calvin Anderson Case, Bronxville, N. The bridesmaids were gowned in Chanel models of filmy chiffon specially tinted to match the glow of the setting sun. An effect of softness, alleviating the high waisted, clinging lines, was achieved by a series of circular ruffles which began at the hips and succeeded each other down the long skirt which continued into a ruffled train. The upper bodices had boleros of the material bordered with circular ruffles, caught both in front and in back to the deep round neck and tied with bows ending in long ruffle-edged streamers. Their hats were close-fitting Agnes turbans of bengaline to match the gowns, fashioned with tight bandeaux drawn back from the face and flaring at each side into full crowns fastened with flat bows at the back. They carried Pernet and Talisman roses combined with African daisies.

Miss Gardner's gown was similarly fashioned of Ward rose yellow; from her bouquet the Pernet roses were omitted to permit of contrast.

The bride wore a gown of soft, creamy satin, having the dignity and lines of the moyen-age, fitted to the figure in front by means of horizontal tucking, and devoid of trimming. The severe princesse effect flared into a built-in train lined with deep yellow ivory satin and extending four yards on the floor. A distinctive feature of the gown were the sleeves, clinging close to the arms to the elbows, where they fell away into drapery, also lined with the deeper toned satin, and widened into flowing demi-trains at either side. Her wedding veil was of ivory-tinted tulle caught into a rose point lace cap and arranged to her hair with a Russian headdress of rose point, ending in tabs at her shoulders. A sheaf of Easter lilies completed her costume.

Stephen Rice Sheldon, brother of the bride, was best man, and the groomsmen were Frank Sheldon, another brother; Thomas Wright Pettus, Rembert La Beaume, John Crago, all of St. Louis; Calvin Anderson Case of Bronxville, John Ames, Chicago, and Stockton Gaines and Joseph Horne, Pittsburg.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Sheldon home, where a smilax-lined canvas marquee had been built to augment the space available for receiving the several hundred guests. The bridal party received in the music room against a background of palms and two tall standards of spring flowers—snapdragon, narcissus, freezia, sweet peas and butterfly roses. A tall vase of spring flowers adorned the newel post in the reception hall; and baskets of them were used about the house. Dinner for the bridal party was served from a table seating 30 guests, laid in the dining room, where the decorations were butterfly roses and steevia, arranged in three great centerpieces on the table and banking the buffet.

The out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Horne Sr., parents of the bridegroom; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Robbins, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Holmes, Pittsburg, the former a cousin of the bridegroom, and his grandfather, Charles Anthony of Chicago.

The bride is a graduate of Mary Institute and Mount Vernon Seminary, Washington. She made her debut at a brilliant reception given by her mother and later was guest of honor at a dinner dance which her parents gave at the St. Louis Country Club. Mr. Horne is a graduate of Princeton University.

Mr. and Mrs. Horne will spend their honeymoon in Florida and will make their home in Pittsburg.

MRS. JOHN E. PATTERSON of Kansas City, Regional Director of the Junior League, who spoke before the St. Louis Chapter Wednesday. She was the guest of Mrs. Charles Mullikin. —Ashen-Brenner.

MRS. CARROLL KNOWLES of San Francisco, who will arrive in St. Louis this week to visit her sister, Mrs. George T. Priest. —Ashen-Brenner.

Dorothy Ladd Weds Woodson K. Woods Jr.

ONE HUNDRED lighted wax tapers in tall branched candelabra shed their mellow glow on the altar of the Second Baptist Church last night when Miss Dorothy Ladd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Ladd, 4429 Westminster place, became the bride of Woodson K. Woods Jr., son of Woodson K. Woods of Brentmoor. The bridal party stood in a bower of greenery interspersed with baskets of Easter lilies while the service was read by the Rev. Dr. M. Ashby Jones, pastor of the church, assisted by the Rev. Dr. David M. Skilling of Webster Groves.

A pleasing departure from the dark colors often employed in mid-winter weddings were the pastel pinks and blues used in the gowns of the bride's attendants. Mrs. Gordon Jaques, sister of the bride as matron of honor, wore a Lelong model of Madonna blue satin designed with a high waisted round neck bodice, without sleeves, and the skirt adorned with a peplum, beneath which fell two scalloped tiers of taffeta and a third of velvet ending in two trains. From a blue velvet bow, placed low on the gown, streamers descended to the floor. Her flowers were Joanna Hill roses and African daisies.

The bridesmaids, Miss Elizabeth Gray, Miss Laura Hancock, Miss Margaret Condie, Miss Ardath Noah and Mrs. Charles A. Niekamp, formerly Miss Martha Strickler, were gowned alike in La France rose taffeta, fashioned similarly to that of Mrs. Jaques, except with taffeta trains, and they carried Mensing roses. They wore rose pink slippers, adorned with Madonna blue velvet bows, and long white kid gloves, the gift of the bride. Preceding the bride was Gordon Jaques Jr., as ring bearer, in blue velvet trousers and an egg shell satin blouse.

The bride wore a Colonial gown of ivory taffeta, trimmed with d'Alencon lace which formed a yoke at the back and over the shoulders, and was knotted in front and shirred to the gown. A narrow belt was tied in a bow at one side. There were long satin lace-edged sleeves and she wore lace mitts after the fashion of the Revolutionary period. A scalloped skirt was shirred to the long bodice at the hips, and formed a scalloped train. She wore an ivory tulle wedding veil, depending from a coronet of lace in bonnet effect, held in place by orange blossoms, and carried lilies of the valley tied with cream colored tulle fastened with a knot of lace.

James Woods was his brother's best man and the groomsmen were E. Baird McDonald Jr., Banks McDonald; Alexander John Alexander, cousin of the bridegroom, Spring Station, Ky.; Charles A. Niekamp and Allen McMath.

New York Society Busy With Weddings

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.

SOCIETY this week concentrated on the bridal veil—an orange blossom atmosphere that attended a long procession of weddings.

Formal nuptials, simple ceremonies, even night weddings—a rarity these days—kept society in an almost perpetual environment of stiff white satin and organ chimes.

The ice carnival in Madison Square Garden and the assembly ball at the Ritz Carlton brought occasional variation to society's programs, but the greater part of its calendars was devoted to weddings and the festivities which accompanied them.

Simple weddings seem to have almost passed from the smart folk's ken. Nowadays the costumes and floral decorations for a fashionable wedding cost a small fortune and the bride, instead of being satisfied with one or two bridesmaids, proceeds to the altar in the wake of six to a dozen attendants, as handsomely outfitted as she.

The wedding of Miss Deborah Dyer and Dr. Yake Kneeland Jr., which took place in St. James' Church, was one of the most brilliant of the week.

The bride was attired in a princess gown of cream-colored satin, the long-sleeved bodice of which was made with a deep V-shaped yoke of old family lace. She wore a veil of rose-point lace that had belonged to her great-great-grandmother and carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and white heather.

Her maid of honor wore a gown of eggshell faille trimmed with green tulle, and a large green velvet hat. Green bows ornamented her eggshell satin slippers and her bouquet was fashioned of green orchids and ferns. The bridal attendants were costumed in similar frocks, except that their trimmings were of brown tulle and their large hats of brown velvet.

Completing the bridal procession was the bride's cousin, Madeleine Drake, as flower girl wearing a short frock of pale green georgette with a small brown tulle hat and carrying a large bouquet of freesia and ferns.

The wedding of Miss Marjorie Heather and Henry Davies Roulston at Saint Bartholomew's, at 8:30 Tuesday evening made it possible for the masculine contingent of society to attend en masse, a matter which they often find difficult at daytime ceremonies. The costumes of the attendants and their bouquets, which stressed the romantic mode, brought interested attention from the feminine guests.

The bride, whose white satin gown was designed with a peacock train bordered by rose point lace, was preceded by attendants whose costumes were a symphony in blue and orchid.

Their frocks were of French blue satin made with demi-trains; their hats of blue tulle decked with ermine tails and their bouquets small blue tulle muffs trimmed with sprays of orchids and lilies of the valley. The maid of honor was similarly costumed in orchid and the matron of honor in deep purple.

In marked contrast to the elaborate wedding ceremonies was the wedding of Miss Sarah Hopper Powell and Prescott Huntington, which took place with Quaker rites in the Friends' meeting house this afternoon. They took their vows before a committee of overseers chosen by the New York monthly meeting.

In obtaining their wedding license this week Mr. Huntington drew his pen through the word "sworn" on the application blank and inserted "affirmed."

A profusion of roses and greenery decorated the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ladd for the reception which followed the ceremony. The receiving line stood in the living room before a mantel banked with Columbia roses and steevia arranged in a long low basket. In the hall were vases of premier roses and steevia, and in the library Pernet roses. Palms screened a stringed orchestra. The chandeliers were festooned with asparagus fern. In the dining room baskets of white roses and steevia were arranged on the mantel and buffet. Lilies of the valley in small vases surrounded the wedding cake which formed the centerpiece for the table. Mr. and Mrs. Woods will sail from San Francisco Jan. 15 for Honolulu, and upon their return will make their home with Mr. Woods Sr.

Mr. Woods gave his bride a string of pearls and to his groomsmen mufflers monogrammed in black. The bride presented her attendants silver and petit point evening bags.

The out-of-town guests here for the ceremony include Mrs. Alexander John Alexander, Spring Station, aunt of the bridegroom, and her son, James Alexander; Mrs. Joseph Carter, also of Kentucky; Mrs. Edward G. Jacques, Kansas City, and Mrs. Clyde Williams, Minneapolis.

The bride attended Hosmer Hall, Miss Bennett's School, Millbrook, N. Y., and Washington University, where she became a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma. Mr. Woods also attended Washington University, and is a member of Beta Theta Pi.

Washington Society In Its Official Phase

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.

WASHINGTON society is entering its official phase, with important functions at the White House, Cabinet homes, embassies and legations and other centers of official life.

Although the White House reception for the judiciary Thursday night was heralded as initiating many innovations, there was no change from the routine of years past except, perhaps, a more homelike atmosphere. The Supreme Court members, who always head the list of those received, dwindled from nine to four, with only two ladies in line—Mrs. Pierce Butler and Mrs. Harlan F. Stone.

Chief Justice Taft who entered a Washington hospital this week, abandoned all social activities a week or two ago, and canceled even the most important official events following the recent death of his brother, Charles P. Taft.

With both the Chief Justice and Mrs. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes absent, Justice Willis Vandevanter was the first guest received.

The ages of the Supreme Court Justices number in the aggregate 640 years, with Justice Harlan F. Stone, born in 1872, the youngest on the bench. Justice and Mrs. Stone are ppoular in all ranks of Washington society.

Mrs. Pierce Butler, who, with her husband, Justice Butler, receives almost as many invitations as do Justice and Mrs. Stone, was regal in her gown of mauve brocade, old lace and jewels.

Because of a severe cold, Mrs. Hoover did not attend the reception.

Because Mrs. Hoover was advised by her physician not to go out or take any part in social life, the President attended alone the dinner given by Vice President Curtis. Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, wife of the Secretary of War, who was asked to fill Mrs. Hoover's place, met the President in the Mayflower Hotel, and while he sat at the right of Mrs. Dolly Gann, Mr. Curtis' sister, Mrs. Hurley was on the right of the Vice President.

She is very handsome and winsome, is Mrs. Hurley, and wore on that night, and also to the White House Thursday night, a gown of turquoise blue and silver brocade fashioned on princess lines, and with a long train. She wore aquamarine earrings, necklace and other adornments of the same stone, set in silver.

The bright, particular star in the procession at the judicial reception, however, as the President led the way downstairs, was Mrs. James J. Davis, wife of the Secretary of Labor.

She wore a striking gown of black lace of princess lines, with a distinctly marked waistline, the ends of the ornamental belt falling low on the skirt. Two deep flounces of lace formed this skirt, the lower one touching the floor at the back and forming a slight train. The neck line was square, the long black suede gloves reaching almost to the shoulders.

Miss Caroline Hyde, daughter of Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Hyde, who is going about, was a dainty figure in the blue room, wearing a new fashioned gown of peach color moire, with the fitted bodice showing a high waistline and a narrow belt held at the front by a diamond clasp.

THE marriage of Miss Mary Lucille Kahman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kahman of Germantown Pa., formerly of St. Louis, and Arthur Reyburn Perry, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. V. The bride was attended by Mrs. Glendon Robertson as matron of honor; Miss Dorothy Dunn as maid of honor, and Miss Lucille Perry, sister of the bridegroom as bridesmaid. Frank U. Perry was best man for his brother and Richard Kahman of Germantown, H. J. Jeters Jr. and Glendale Robertson of St. Louis and John O'Donnell of Davenport, Ia., were groomsmen.

The altar was adorned in clusters of calla lilies against palms and other greenery and was illuminated by white tapers. The bride was given in marriage by her father and wore a gown of ivory satin made on princess lines. The round neckline ended in a deep V at the back, which was trimmed in a soft bow of the satin. There were short cap sleeves and the circular skirt terminated in a long train. She wore mitts of rose point lace. Her veil of ivory tulle was arranged simply about her face and she carried a sheaf of calla lilies.

Her attendants wore gowns of moire and tulle. The gowns with long tulle sleeves were molded to the figures and the flared skirts edged in the tulle swept the floor in a short train. The maid of honor wore orchid and the others were in Nile green. They wore off-the-fac hats of maline to match their gowns. The maid of honor carried American beauty roses and the bridesmaid and matron of honor Pernet roses. Mrs. Kahman wore a gown of fuchsia satin crepe with a small felt hat to match. Her flowers were orchids arranged in shoulder corsage.

The U-shaped table was dec ed in white roses and baby br with traceries of smilax. Fol ing the honeymoon, Mr. Perry his bride will make their home Davenport, Ia.

More Flexible Divorce Laws Advocated by Lord Birkenhead To Reclaim Miserable-Lives

Sober Joys of Matrimony Denied Many Persons Wedded to Convicts, Drunkards and Those Diseased or Mentally Afflicted.

By THE EARL OF BIRKENHEAD,
Former Lord Chancellor of England
(Copyright, 1930)

THE former British Lord Chancellor's views on divorce, as expressed in the following article, though based on English law and custom, have a particular interest in this country because of the wide divergence both as to law and interpretation in the several states.

"IT is established beyond all question that for various reasons, amongst others improvident, reckless and early marriages, drunkenness, sensuality, brutality, immorality, lunacy, and crime, many marriages become absolute failures, and married life becomes either morally or physically, or both morally and physically, impossible."

"Unless the unions formed by marriages which have already ceased in fact can be dissolved in law, lives become hopelessly miserable, illegal unions are formed, immorality results or illegitimate children are born."

These two quotations from the Report of the Royal Commission Upon Divorce set out clearly the social reasons why marriage, which all agree should in this realm be monogamous and lifelong, should be dissoluble. A law which prevents the dissolution of marriage in cases where for the most cogent reasons of the interests of society such a union ought to be terminated is a law both cruel and unjust.

No one denies that the Christian ideal of marriage is noble and uplifting or that all married people ought to strive to attain that ideal. No one denies that it is best in the interests of society that a marriage once contracted should subsist, if possible, until it is dissolved by death. But if, in order to attain that ideal, a marriage, the parties to which can never attain it, shall nevertheless continue to exist as a mockery and a sham; if in order to attain the best interests of society a marriage which has in fact ceased to exist in all but the eye of the law, must perforce continue contrary to those interests, then truly the pursuit of ideals and the conservation of social interests are turned to their own destruction.

Obligations in Marriage.

Marriage, though an institution necessary to the state, is not compulsory upon any citizen. Many foolish and improvident marriages are contracted but no one draws from that fact the conclusion that marriage should be more narrowly restricted than it is. Every one recognizes that undue obstacles ought not to be placed in the way of those who seek to contract marriage, and the restrictions placed upon the right to do so are limited—so carefully limited in some respects as to be derisory yet, when once it is suggested that carefully restricted and guarded provision should be made to dissolve marriages which are no real marriages, it is at once argued that such facilities will lead to abuses and a train of reasoning is accepted which, if applied to the contracting of marriage, would be at once seen to be wrong and be rejected. It must be admitted that there are people who marry though they have no adequate conception of the obligations which they thereby undertake. Such people are not confined to one class of the community. Their unions are, like the unions of brute beasts, or are even more casually contracted and more lightly ended. Such people readily take advantage of any means of terminating a union which is merely carnal, and whether divorce existed or not would in fact make and unmake fresh alliance as their levity suggests or appetites demand. It is not with regard to such people that the grave problems of marriage and divorce can properly be discussed. Depravity derides religion and evades the law.

Fortunately, the great majority of the people of any civilized country are decent people to whom marriage appeals for its sober joys and comfortable welfare. They desire the ideal; they respect the interests of society. Free to contract marriage or to remain celibate, they deliberately elect to live in lawful union, realizing its responsibilities and undertaking its obligations with the intention, so far as in them lies, to make their marriage happy and successful. It is with regard to such men and women that these problems must be discussed, remembering that a member of this class has decided that a celibate life is not one which is suitable for him or her. Few, indeed, there are for whom such a life is right and proper.

When such a man or woman has contracted a marriage, which contrary to all hopes and resolutions has resulted in failure; when the marriage has turned out to be no marriage except in law; then so far as the law gives him or her no redress it is harsh and unreasoning. By this, it is not meant and cannot be suggested that divorce should be easy or that rules can be dispensed with. In all such discussions, the true interests of society must never be lost sight of. But, viewing the law as it stands, divorce is cruel because it is inadequate to do justice.

Some Obstacles Lifted.

It is true that in recent years some attempt has been made to remove some of the more obvious injustices. The extension of facilities to poor persons, which were practically denied to them because of the cost, has enabled many to obtain redress which the law allowed but their means forbade. The ground of adultery applies in equal degree now to both man and woman. The temptation is greater in the case of a man, the consequences are not often so serious as in the case of a woman. The reason for the change is, and can only be, that the trespass is, on the part of the one as much as of the other, a breach of the same solemn obligation of mutual fidelity.

It will surprise some to learn that if a man marries a woman who has deceived him though she knows, and he does not, that she is pregnant by another man, the marriage is valid, and he has no cause in law to complain. The old common law of purchase and sale certainly laid down the principle caveat emptor, but even the common law recognized that fraud going to the root of the matter vitiated the contract. Ecclesiastical law has a habit of being sterner, harsher, and more unbending than the common law, perhaps because its makers did not live in the world and did not realize all that such rules mean to frailer humanity. Inheriting the old rule, the law of divorce gives no redress—a stupid unmeaning premium on female fraud. If such a trick were played on the sovereign, it would, by statute of Henry VIII, be high treason, but the divorce court pays no heed to this treason to the state of matrimony. The unfortunate husband must bear his lot patiently, waiting in the hope that his wife will be unfaithful. What a marriage! What a vindication of a divine institution!

It may be said that there are few such cases. There are, indeed, not many, but most people know of at least one case, and none know of a marriage, thus violated in advance, which has proved a success.

The law recognizes that a lu-

American Industry and Finance

By Winston Churchill

Manufacturing and Speculation Are Inextricably Intertwined

So Long as Taste Conforms to the Rules, Mass Production Affords Householders Incredibly Efficient Service, Says Distinguished British Visitor.

By WINSTON CHURCHILL.
(Copyright, 1930, Quotations Not Allowed)

THE structure of American industry has qualities of magnificence not to be seen elsewhere and never seen before. In no other country has science so wide a field in which to range as in the vast territories of the United States. Nowhere else has production been attempted on so great a scale, nowhere else have the principles of method, management and organization been so boldly applied. A community of 120,000,000 in possession of what is almost a self-contained continent have walled themselves off from the outer world and are in process of organizing themselves as a single unit of production and distribution. Within the tariff ramparts the keenest competition and the largest combinations have grown up together. Throughout an area nearly as large as Europe and comprising almost every natural product and climate, utterly unrestricted, the freest interchange of goods and services prevails. The quality of their product may often fall below European level. Their cost frequently exceeds those of Old World industry. Their science is no greater nor the skill of their workmen higher than in European countries. Americans themselves often prefer the products of Europe to their own and are not deterred by the highest tariff penalties from buying the foreign specialties they require.

But there is one outstanding characteristic of American industry which lifts it above that of any other nation. Napoleon said "I have always marched with the opinion of four or five million of men."

That is the spirit of American industry. Mass production of standardized articles of necessity or convenience for tens of millions and for scores of millions of consumers. Find out something that the average household requires, or would like, or might be tempted to buy. Choose some product or element in universal demand and then make it with the most perfect machinery and on the largest possible scale. There lies the secret of the mammoth fortunes and of standards of living and of practical convenience for the millions already beyond all compare.

Habits and Industries Grow Side by Side.

The life and habits of the American people and the structure of their industries grow side by side, acting and re-acting upon each other in intimate relation. People do not entirely live the life they choose nor choose the things they buy. These are to a remarkable extent decided for them by the leaders of their industrial production. The wants of scores of millions of households are comprehended and foreseen before they are expressed and the individual purchaser adapts himself to the wholesale facilities offered and regulates his life accordingly. He clambers up as it were upon a scaffolding of standardized necessities, comforts, conveniences and luxuries and finds so long as his taste conforms to the rules, an incredibly efficient service. The hundred things he may require are offered him in cheap and excellent abundance. If he wants something different he must import it at enormous expense or do without it. He must march comfortably with the millions along the broad highway, or paddle about among the brambles and morasses by himself.

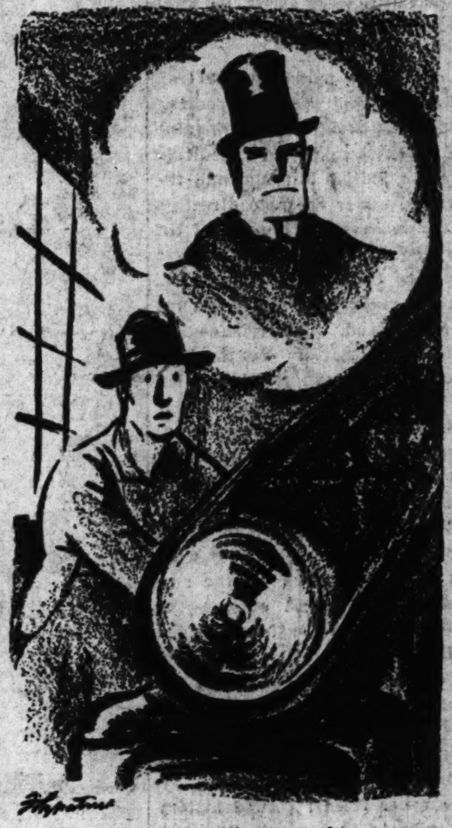
The connection between speculative finance and industry is omnipresent. The frenzies of speculation begin upon the bounding, buoyant platform of industry. All the standardized conveniences which the workshops offer to the American home, all the materials and money of the processes of production are immediately caught into the quotations of the Stock Exchange and whirled about in furious speculation.

The popular features of American life, the essentials of industrial production are also the favorite gambling counters of the American people. "Here is a bed. I sleep in a bed. All my neighbors sleep in beds. This is the best kind of bed for Americans to sleep in. Millions were bought last year, I will buy one for myself. I will buy it on the installment principle. What's more I will buy shares in the company. I will buy them also on margin. The shares will go up, I shall help to send them up by buying a bed. If I make a profit on the shares I shall get the bed for nothing. If I make a loss I will work all the harder and earn more wages." The producing, financing and consuming powers are all seen striding forward recklessly perhaps, but in intimate alliance and turbulent strength.

Mushroom Growth of Big Industries.

Nothing more repays British study than the mass mentality of American industry. The United States have largely passed the stage where businesses grow up by degrees, adding a little year by year to humble beginnings. Gigantic enterprises are planned from the outset and lay out, plans, financing, advertising, distribution are brought into being as by the stroke of a wand. Nothing like it has been known in England since the national shell and gun factories created under the Ministry of Munitions. The scale of American business and production is so large and their market so sure and fertile, that the chiefs can plan and act with the same sense of range, freedom and power which have only been wielded in the European industrial field under conditions of war.

The results are surprising in many directions. Much of the old antagonism between the millions and the millionaire has become obsolete. There is a fairly widespread comprehension that multimillionaires presiding over numerous businesses or trusts can give 120 million people what they want far better than a multitude of small independent producers. The largest electorate in the world has through universal suffrage steadily supported the reduction of direct taxation upon the well to do, the rich and the very rich. Even the most lamentable scandals have not alienated the masses from the dominant and ruling party. The conviction of growing prosperity and that in material things the country is on the right lines is deeply and widely spread. Moreover every active, intelligent young American feels he carries, like the soldiers of Napoleon's army, the baton of a marshal in his knapsack. He does not want to pull down the millionaire. He wants to be one himself. And why not?



". . . . every intelligent, active young American feels he carries, like the soldiers of Napoleon's army, the baton of a Marshal in his knapsack. He does not want to pull down the millionaire. He wants to be one himself." Churchill.

> THIS is the ninth of ten articles by Winston Spencer Churchill, British statesman, on his impressions during a recent tour. Churchill, who was First Lord of the Admiralty at the beginning of the World War, was Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Conservative Cabinet which went out of office when Ramsay MacDonald became Prime Minister. In his final article next Sunday he will discuss the development of Canada.

Conviction of Growing Prosperity Makes Obsolete Antagonism to Millionaires With Every Intelligent Young American Wanting to Be One.

American industry and business cohesion, despite all its violent shocks has brought the nation into a grand position. The whole army is fighting hard, the soldiers know that they are winning the battle. They know they are conquering vast new territories from nature. They know that they are supporting it by every resource of science. They believe that thir organization is more powerful and more well-directed than any yet conceived. On then, amid the explosions and pitfalls of the battlefield, over the bodies of the fallen, over the ruins of old-fashioned structures, victory is certain. That there are prizes for the successful, promotion for the many and a good and improving livelihood for all! Such is the spirit which has been evoked by capitalist production competing and combining in the largest economic theater ever freely opened to the enterprise of man.

I must record the impression that these developments are only in their beginning, that they are only just getting into their stride and that there are no limits yet in sight to the material prosperity of the American democracy.

The new outlook of the American masses is matched by that of their leaders. American capitalists think on entirely different lines from those of Europe. They have during the present century freed their minds from the poverty complex, long hours, and low wage philosophies which reign in the Old World. The character of their mass production has unified the interest of capital and labor in a novel and impressive degree. The capitalist or industrial chief knows that his fortune depends upon the consuming power of the broad masses. To preserve and extend that consuming power is the foundation of his policy. Thus when the great market collapse occurred in October and perhaps 10 million pounds sterling of values evaporated in a month, a cry—odd to European ears—broke from the breasts of the millionaires. "At all costs keep up the wages."

Unusual Doctrine But Not Altruistic.

This was not so much the result of reasoning and study as an instinctive gesture. There was nothing particularly altruistic about it. That is the way they have learned to think and act. "Unless we can keep up their wages, they cannot buy our goods, and unless they buy our goods, we are done for!" I thought it deeply impressive to hear in this crisis from leading men on every side this same doctrine. "So long as the wages are maintained, nothing else matters and everything will come right and go forward again."

Whether they will succeed or not is not yet proved, and I have no instruments to measure the seismic shock which has been sustained. But it is their mentality and outlook which should rivet European attention. It would seem that the mysterious gap between the producing and consuming powers has been more narrowed and that its interdependence is more effectively apparent in the United States than was ever known elsewhere possible. Mass production of standardized articles in a market sufficiently vast and an area sufficiently varied has begun to harmonize antagonisms of interest as old as the world. The capitalist advances under the banner of "High wages, enough leisure to spend them in, and better times for all" and the masses follow, confident that in one way or the other they will all win through.

Did I say all—well, all but the unemployed and the unemployables. The American army, generals and rank and file alike, regard them as inevitable casualties of a victorious battle. To them unemployment may be an episode but is not a problem. They cannot understand our intense concentration upon this melancholy feature. They think we are working at the wrong end. Look after the employed, they say, "and you will find in a very short time the unemployed will look after themselves."

Even though our respective situations are so different, it may be of interest to note the way they look at things.

Dissension Weakens Germany, Says Marx, Calling on Leaders to Put State Welfare Above Party

People as Well as Rulers Pass on World Problems Today, He Points Out—Cites Meetings With French.

By WILHELM MARX,
Thrice Chancellor of Germany.
(Copyright, 1930)

BERLIN, Jan. 11.

EVENTUAL and perhaps stormy weeks are ahead of us. On Jan. 3, the second Hague Conference began, designated to complete the work initiated by the first conference. On Jan. 21 the plenipotentiaries of America, England, France, Italy and Japan will come together in London to discuss naval disarmament and to come at least nearer solution of this extraordinarily disputed and difficult problem.

The world has become very modest in its expectation of results from political conferences, even when these have been preceded by such promising agreements as those reached between President Hoover and the British Premier MacDonald. Nevertheless, the fact that these two statesmen so courageously and decisively furthered the issue of naval disarmament is of historic importance for the whole world and will always redound to their glory. Even a dispassionate observer cannot fail to see that the idea of peace is gaining ground in the world. When a ship's captain, whose vessel was sunk by a submarine and he himself made prisoner, and the commander of that submarine come together and greet each other in such a hearty and friendly manner as recently happened in London, this is a happening such as would have been regarded 20 years ago as impossible.

French-German Meetings.

A fact that is also to be gladly welcomed is that with increasing frequency French and Germans are coming together, now in one country and now in another, in order to discuss differences of opinion that have existed between the two lands for a thousand years and in order to get better acquainted with each other to the end that since fate made their two peoples neighbors, they may bring about an enduring peace. All this represents indisputably progress to be heartily acclaimed by all the friends of mankind. Now it is the Democrats of the two countries who exchange views with each other. Again, it is the Catholics, and in part, even the members of the political Right who conferred several days ago in the German capital on the political situation of their respective countries.

The negotiations in Berlin found an echo in the French Chamber. But the Radicals of the French Right need not be disquieted, for their friends defended France's wishes and interests in Berlin with all decisiveness, in many cases indeed with such sharpness that some of the German participants in the conference were almost tempted to doubt the possibility of reaching any understanding. But every step taken along this line is to be welcomed no matter how short and timorous it may be. I am convinced that the oftener such meetings take place and the better one becomes acquainted with the other man, the earlier one can look for reaching the goal aimed at by so many. It is peoples now who must reach an understanding, not rulers alone and professional diplomats.

France Improves Position.

Even a non-French observer must pay tribute to the patriotic attitude of the French Chamber towards the Andre Tardieu Cabinet, which was so sharply opposed only a few weeks earlier. Tardieu and Briand will be able at The Hague to point with satisfaction to the almost unanimous approval of their plans by the representatives of the French people. By the vote of 342—cast, it is especially worth noting, almost altogether by the parties of the Right—against only 17 adverse votes, the foreign policies of Tardieu and Briand were approved by the Chamber as correct. In the face of such a strong position, the German delegates at The Hague will find themselves in a difficult situation. The German Government also received a vote of confidence from the Reichstag on Dec. 14 of 222 against 156.

The German people are still plainly suffering from their ancient national weakness; dissension and stubborn differences of opinion even in the face of most important decisions upon which the fate of the whole nation depends. The time that has passed since the revolution has not sufficed to bring us to an understanding of the duties imposed by genuine democracy. Those elements that feel themselves unable to approve the existing governmental system have not yet learned to carry on their opposition in the true sense of democratic constitutional government. Hugenberg believed he could accomplish great and advantageous things for the German people through his referendum. But what he actually did was everything possible to weaken the Government's position abroad, and at the same time he destroyed his own party.

The duel between Dr. Schacht, the president of the Reichsbank, and the German Government is probably unique in political history. Dr. Schacht is undoubtedly correct in declaring the decisions of the Hague Conference represent the utmost demands that can be filled by Germany. Indeed, one can with complete justification bring up the question as to how the experts picture to themselves the possibility of Germany's fulfilling such obligations. In any event, the German delegation at the conference at The Hague will have to count on the sharpest opposition if it should make any further concessions in addition to those already made.

Hague Struggle Ahead.

Germany's delegates to the first Hague Conference were unfortunately compelled to make far-reaching concessions which, regarded from an economic standpoint, justified to some extent Dr. Schacht's opposition. Germany's representatives realize to the fullest extent the gravity of the situation. They will be compelled to reject with utmost tenacity every attempt to go beyond the limits already set. Hence, The Hague will bring hard and bitter struggles. There will be menacing political winter storms. If the conference is to lead to good results, it will not be quickly over. The situation will be rendered more difficult if it should develop that the English and French delegates reached an agreement in their last discussions in London regarding certain methods of procedure. It will be impossible to cherish all too great hopes of the happy result of the conference if the two opposing camps take from the beginning a sharply antagonistic attitude.

But despite all this, the hope of a further long step forward on the road of world peace may not be abandoned. And then the German people will face as their first grave duty the problem of bringing their finances in order. Party doctrines and party platforms will have to be relegated to the background if this problem is to be solved satisfactorily. The German Government has already taken energetic steps and it has submitted a sharply defined financial program to the Reichstag which has already adopted it in a large part. The Socialistic party has also already taken encouraging steps in the same direction. The acceptance by that party of import duties on agricultural products and increased indirect taxes

The Anti-Norris Combine.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

THE Anti-Saloon League, perpetual alibi for prohibition and its stepchildren, hijacking, bootlegging, crime, poison booze and intemperance, knifed Al Smith in the last election for his nerve in even suggesting a better system of temperance. Convinced that Smith was the best bet for all the people, Senator Norris of Nebraska went A. W. O. L. from his party camp and supported the noted New Yorker. Now Norris is up for re-election and these self-appointed habit regulators for everybody are after Norris' political scalp.

Religious bigots whoop it up for the Constitution in one breath, but in another they junk its most sacred amendment, the first, by applying the submarine to a candidate on account of his religion. Norris ignored that imbecility and employed sheer merit as his yardstick to measure fitness for office, so these big mouths and small intellects have joined the super-dictators of personal conduct by enlisting in the anti-Norris war.

Norris refuses to sanction a perpetual franchise to the utilities combine to exploit the public pocketbook; declines to support the Power Trust in its eager desire to get hold of our public resources to be exploited for private gain, so these overstuffed boys second the motion that Norris go to the political butcher shop.

Norris ever has believed that human rights and welfare should take precedence over dollars, and a negative mob joins the anti-Norris horn blowers. Norris believes that when an issue is principle vs. party regularity, principle ought to win.

Will Norris get a well-earned new credential from his constituency or will a portion of our electorate forfeit its right to function as the custodians of representative government? The answer will come roaring in from Nebraska, next August.

Sunday Scholar vs. Rabbit Hunter.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

IN your issue of Jan. 6 there appeared a letter written by A. M. Robinson of Irondale, Mo., wherein he asks the question: "Whose children when grown make the best citizens: The children trained in Sunday School or the children trained to hunt rabbits on Sunday?"

Due to statistics being unavailable it would be difficult to give an infallible answer, but in the same issue of your paper I read where a Sunday School boy brutally killed his father and wounded his mother. A great many times I have read where boys, and grownups, have gone insane over religion, but I have yet to read where a boy or man went insane over Sunday rabbit hunting.

My answer to A. M. Robinson is that there isn't a Sunday school in the land where a boy would be farther from hypocrisy, intrigue and sham than when he is out hunting rabbits. The Sunday School students are well represented in our penitentiaries and there are plenty of statistics to substantiate this statement.

TOLERANCE.

For Scrapping Battleships.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

AS THE hour approaches for the London conference on naval disarmament it is gratifying to read of the 600,000 Shriners of North America lining up with the United Churches to demand some really adequate action to accord with the world's solemn declaration of war's outlawry. Their joint action lends color to the hope that in 1930 there may be something greater and nobler done than petty haggling and niggling over one or two battleships more or less for Japan, Britain and the United States.

Even before 1914 Admiral Scott told the world that superdreadnaughts were virtually useless encumbrances in face of the development in bombing airplanes. Col. Mitchell emphasized the same fact, and the sinking of the Washington by such bombs after the guns of the Texas failed added practical testimony.

But, though useless, these huge toys are frightfully expensive; some $50,000,000 each to construct, plus $2,000,000 per annum for upkeep and crew. At best or worse all they can do is to sink each other and they cannot do that as speedily as can be done by bombing airplanes at a thousandth part of the expenditure. Moreover in a few years they become obsolete, are scrapped, and the Admiralties demand new ones more and more costly. Why? Solely to prepare for the next war!

But the ink is hardly dry on the document we have solemnly signed declaring there shall be no "next war"; it has been outlawed by all the world. Our national honor demands that we act in accordance with our written pledge. Battleships, as their name implies, are built solely for war; if we mean to keep our agreement and preserve that honor, why not scrap the whole lot? They are simply an offense and threat to other nations. Let us realize that we are living in a new world in which scores of impossibilities have been made possible. Why not this?

ACADEMIC FREEDOM.

If academic freedom is to be preserved in the United States, the country will chiefly have to thank the American Association of University Professors. Except for the judgments of that organization, such incidents as the suspension of Prof. Max F. Meyer and dismissal of his assistant, Prof. Harmon O. De Graff, at the University of Missouri and the expulsion of Frederick E. Woltman, graduate assistant at the University of Pittsburg, would lie where the trustees of those institutions left them. That would be disastrous to education, as it would have been disastrous had Harvard University forbidden Prof. Felix Frankfurter to investigate the case of Sacco and Vanzetti.

Students presumably attend the universities to learn how to think, and how can they do so if the professors themselves are forbidden to think? The Germans, whose universities are the finest in the world, would not dream of putting uninformed laymen over the professors. The tradition of academic freedom is one of the most precious traditions of Germany. Without it there never would have been any science. A vigilant intolerance would have strangled it in infancy. Recently at the University of Tennessee a professor was summarily discharged because he used James Harvey Robinson's "The Mind in the Making" as a text book. That would have astonished the Germans, the English, or the French, who assume that at a university the professor is the judge of what the student should hear.

Fortunately, both the University of Pittsburg and the University of Missouri have been put in the public pillory, as they should have been, for denying the principle of academic freedom. The trustees of the University of Pittsburg may rail at the judgment of the association, as the trustees of the University of Missouri may defy the verdict which the association has just delivered in the case of Prof. Meyer; but neither institution can despise the opinions of the committees which investigated both incidents and delivered upon them the judgments of education. The judgments of education are important. Whatever may be thought in Missouri of the Meyer incident, or whatever may be thought at Pittsburg of the Woltman incident, the judgments of the university professors who went into both fields to investigate are final. The association is education's court of appeals, a facility without which there could be no academic freedom.

The committee which went to Pittsburg found there a very sinister situation. The executives are trying to build up the university on funds given by the State of Pennsylvania and rich people in Pittsburg. They have therefore been careful that nothing distasteful to these prospective philanthropists occurred at the institution. When Woltman, graduate assistant in the Department of Philosophy, associated himself with a group which invited Prof. Harry Elmer Barnes to talk about the Mooney case, the administration stepped in and closed the university halls to any such engagement. When the group met on a nearby lot and Barnes spoke from the running board of an automobile, the graduate assistant was discharged. All this upon the theory that to discuss the imprisonment of Mooney, or to raise doubts of his guilt, may be distasteful to those of whom the University of Pittsburg has expectations. The committee which investigated this situation delivered a scathing condemnation of such practices. It found that none of the members of the faculty had a contract for more than one year, that all of them were apprehensive of what might happen if they said something to offend the administration, and that the feeling of repression among the professors was intense. President Bowman denied that the university objected to professors taking part in the discussion of public questions, but he said he did object to "propaganda that seems to associate the university with the end sought." The case attracted wide attention, and the judgment of the committee was applauded in every quarter where academic freedom is cherished.

The case of Prof. Meyer is better known. Following more than a quarter of a century of valuable service to the University of Missouri, he was suspended for a year after distributing in one of the social science courses a sex questionnaire which fell into the hands of persons outside the student body and set the State by the ears. The astonished psychologist testified that he was wholly unprepared for the sensation that resulted, and the committee which investigated the case is quite agreed that he was not prepared for it. There is a quality of naivete about such academicians that must be taken into account in every judgment of them. It is excellently illustrated by the anecdote of the university professor who was saved from drowning. As the lifeguard took him ashore the saved man suddenly began laughing uproariously. "How can a man who came as near drowning as you did laugh?" asked the guard. "I just recalled that I knew how to swim all the time," answered the professor, going off into another gale of laughter.

The Post-Dispatch said at the time exactly what the investigating committee says now. It felt that the president of the university, Dr. Stratton D. Brooks, should have stepped in between the university and the public. Had he accepted the offense as no more than what the committee calls a failure to appreciate the unpreparedness of the public for such a forthright questioning of the students, the mischief makers off the campus would have been undone. Instead, Dr. Brooks became the prosecutor and thereby magnified the matter out of all proper relation to its importance. The committee says he misrepresented the questionnaire to the public, and it has been unable to accept his judgment as to the importance of the incident to the university. The committee says it was of no fundamental importance, but Dr. Brooks and some of the superheated people about him tried to make it appear that the morals of the students were at stake. As Senator Copeland of New York, who applauds the committee, says: Dr. Brooks and his associates mistook prudery for morality.

We realize that this judgment will no more be accepted in Missouri than the other judgment will be accepted in Pittsburg. That also is unimportant. The committee which came to Missouri consisted of: A. J. Carlson, University of Chicago, chairman; Percy Bordwell, University of Iowa; John H. Gray, American University, Washington, D. C.; L. L. Thurston, University of Chicago. These gentlemen, whose professional stature is in nowise lessened by what may be thought at our State University, consider that the situation of academic freedom, the security of tenure, and independence in research, is serious in Missouri. They invite to it the serious attention of university men in general and of national organizations of investigators and educators in particular. They do not believe that the students were so shocked as Dr. Brooks and his fellow witch burners made out. They assert the belief that such innocence of life as was so ballyhooed by the howling pack which drove Prof. Meyer into exile is a myth. They leave us to infer that all those people knew it was a myth and deliberately exploited it as such, which is the severest stricture made upon Dr. Brooks' capacity as a tactful executive. It was rather rubbing it in for the committee to add that Missouri is not among the ranking universities, which was by this sign quite plain long before the Governor's Survey Commission told us how poor it is, or before Prof. Ellwood resigned because he could not live on his miserable $5000 salary.

We knew that Missouri would not be happy when this judgment came, and we urged the State University to right itself. It could have done so by reinstating Prof. Meyer and asking him to remember that in the matter of sex the sensibilities of parents, particularly those who never studied zoology, physiology, biology or other social sciences, are tender, albeit those of children are hard as this committee says they are. The university refused to do it. It held out in the stiff-necked fashion characteristic of ignorance, and so landed in the public stocks.

FINDING A LOST EMPIRE.

That ancient and useful garden tool, the humble spade, is opening the trail of the 5000-year-old trek of civilization from the dawn of history to the present noonday. The trail leads to the town of Ur, the first city built after the creation of the universe, that is, the creation described in the Bible.

When Great Britain obtained a mandate over Irak the archeologists decided that this was an opportune time to dig in the sands of the desert for the remains of the ancient cities of Mesopotamia. An expedition was sent out jointly by the British Museum and the University of Pennsylvania, under the able direction of C. Leonard Woolley, to excavate on the site of Ur, and rich treasures have been unearthed.

The city is the Ur of the Chaldeans, from which, according to the scriptural record, Abraham was led by the Lord and given a new land. The archeologists have found evidence indicating that Ur was the first city built after the flood, because under it is a thick stratum of clay which they are inclined to think is the deposit of the flood. Under the clay are relics of a wholly different race and civilization, probably destroyed by the flood waters which covered all that region. The city was built by the Sumerians, a sturdy, superior race, who had a pictorial script with which they wrote meager records on clay tablets. They were skillful metal workers and, conquering all the surrounding peoples, established a great empire—the forerunner of Babylon—which they boasted extended over the world—their limited world. They constructed a system of canals and traded, as articles in the city show, with distant peoples. They brought the art of metal working to a high state of perfection. It is reported that the technique of some of their metal work surpasses that of the Italian Renaissance.

The complete disappearance from recorded history of Ur and its great empire is even more extraordinary than the advance of the Sumerians in civilization and the arts in the beginning of history. The remains of Ur take us back to the fourth millennium B. C. Thirty-three hundred years before the Christian era it became a monumental city under its builder King, Ur-Nammu, and afterwards vanished out of the ken of mankind. For over 2000 years there has been no discoverable mention of Ur.

The Euphrates shifted its channel, Ur was left in the desert and the sandstorms covered it, even the ziggurat, the lofty worship tower built by Ur-Nammu 400 years before Abraham was born. In its tomb of sand Ur was preserved intact for the delectation and instruction of people undreamt of in its day, whose ancestors were roaming savages when Ur was in the height of its prosperity and glory.

Macaulay's vision of the New Zealander viewing the ruins of London is continually realized in this changing world. How long before the archeologists of the future will reconstruct our skyscrapers and machines from the relics collected in museums?

THE COUNT AND THE PEASANT.

When Count Keyserling spoke of "the peasant-like quality of the Missourian," he was, as he explains in his letter to the Post-Dispatch, "paying him a compliment." He was using the word in its literal and European sense. He is in agreement, too, with the French savant and cosmopolitan man of letters, Andre Siegfried, that the peasant class "is the backbone of France." The dictionary, by the way, preferably defines peasant as "a small land owner, or lease holder, who tills the soil."

But the word is without repute in American connotation. Politically, it is not in our language. It savors of caste and fixed, hereditary inferiority which our philosophy denies, our practice has abolished and our immortal "declaration" forever disavows. It may be ventured, indeed, that an observer endowed with the normal quota of perception and manners would not employ the term.

It will be remarked, of course, that the Count will visit us again—that arrangements are now being made for his "next lecture tour in the United States." There is a future event to which, we are inclined to believe, some 120,000,000 of us are looking forward with practically no interest at all.

THE LATEST MODEL B WEDDING.

Three kinds of weddings and honeymoons are available to our "popular young folk" in this standardized age, says the Outlook, cataloguing them as follows:

The Model A, or Lindbergh, sometimes known as the Shun All Publicity at All Costs (costs considerable.)

Model B, or Tunney, called the High Hat All Publicity (also in the luxury class.)

Model C, or Coolidge, referred to as the Bring on Your Cameras (this is fairly reasonable; indeed, may prove remunerative.)

Helen Wills and her husband are classified as having chosen Model A, departing from the stock design only to face the cameras, as in Model C, on leaving the church.

The recent royal nuptials at Rome were of course a De Luxe Model B wedding. The honeymoon, however, is a bit disappointing. The happy pair has gone no farther than out into the country near Pisa, for a "very short honeymoon." And this for a bride who is said to have a $6,500,000 dowry and a bridegroom whose father is reputed to be the wealthiest man in Italy. Since the Gene Tunneys went to Italy and stayed the greater part of a year, the Humbert Savoys really should visit the United States if they are to get all that is coming to them under Model B. But then Humbert is only a Crown Prince, and not a retired Shakspeare lecturer.

The Farmer's Share In Our Prosperity

Agriculture in excellent condition at end of war because of exports to Europe and high prices crops commanded; with reaction, value of products and land collapsed; farmer, however, continued to pay high for needs and taxes still went up; 1927 income estimated at $1,717,000,000 below modest rate of return on capital.

Stuart Chase in the Nation.

THE World War encouraged huge exports of American foodstuffs. We fed millions of European peasants who had left their fields for the trenches. Prices went up, acreage increased, the tractor became popular, efficiency was widely introduced. At the close of hostilities American agriculture was in an exceedingly prosperous condition, relatively speaking. Prices had been pegged, land values were soaring, credit was readily obtainable. The whole economic structure of agriculture had been given a glorious kick upstairs. Exports held up well in 1919 and fairly well in 1920. In 1921 Europe suddenly stopped buying. Farm products shipped abroad tumbled $1,300,000,000. Wholesale prices collapsed. Land values exploded like pricked balloons. Unnumbered farmers who had been thinking of Florida, California and a new sedan found their thoughts centered on mortgage interest.

The following figures from "Recent Economic Changes" tell the sad story more effectively than any purple prose:

Index Numbers.

	Prices rec'd for products.	Prices paid by farmers for supplies.	Wages of farm labor.	Taxes on property.
1914	100	100	100	100
1918	200	178	176	118
1919	209	205	206	130
1920	205	206	239	155
1921	116	156	150	217
1922	124	152	146	232
1923	135	153	166	246
1924	134	154	166	249
1925	147	159	168	250
1926	136	156	171	253
1927	131	154	170	258

There is really very little more to say. Where farmers were getting $1 for their corn or wheat or cotton in 1914 they were getting more than $2 in 1919 and 1920. Then the whole structure collapsed to $1.16 in 1921—cut almost in half. It has climbed up a little since, but in 1927 it was only $1.31. This is bad enough, but look at the three other columns. The prices which farmers paid for their clothing, hardware and other supplies had also doubled by 1920, and also tobogganed in 1921. But instead of going down to 116, they went only to 156—where they have more or less remained. American agriculture has thus been caught in the famous "scissors" which the Russians talk about. It must pay relatively more for what it buys than it receives for what it sells. In 1927 the jaws were 23 painful points apart. In the last two years they have narrowed a little, but they are still wide enough to make the pain sufficiently intense.

The same thing happened in respect to the wages paid to farm labor, except that the scissors are even wider—39 points in 1927, and still widening. This has helped hired men a little but not the farmers who hire them. In taxes the situation is even more deplorable. Instead of dropping in 1921, taxes continued to climb. By 1927 they were no less than 127 points ahead of farm product prices! The chief reason for higher farm taxes lies in highway construction in rural areas. Figures for several counties in Michigan show that in the last seven years taxes have absorbed 90 per cent of the net return to farm owners. Other studies indicate that an absorption of one-third to two-thirds the net return is common. This woeful burden operates to depress land values. For the last century the value of such lands has been marching steadily upward. Farmers came to believe that a mounting curve was as dependable as a mounting thermometer in spring.

To continue reciting the woes of agriculture may seem unnecessarily cruel. As an accountant, however, I cannot forbear to append Dr. Copeland's beautiful profit and loss account covering all American farms for the year ending June 30, 1927 (including estimate for food grown and consumed on farm):

Gross value of agricultural production	$12,127,000,000
Payments to other industrial groups	3,697,000,000
	$8,430,000,000
Wages paid hired labor	$1,291,000,000
Rents paid—net	1,267,000,000
Interest paid	260,000,000
Loss due to fall in land values	2,160,000,000
	4,978,000,000
Net return to owners	$3,452,000,000
Interest on market value of equity	$1,759,000,000
Charge for owner's labor at $540	3,410,000,000
"Normal profit"	5,169,000,000
Deficit of actual profit	$1,717,000,000

To pay each farmer an average of $540 for his year's work, and 4½ per cent interest on the equity in his farm, would have taken $1,717,000,000 more than farmers actually received. Regarding all American agriculture as one business corporation, it was, despite a shockingly low allowance for labor, nearly $2,000,000,000 in the red at a time when American prosperity was the favorite topic at innumerable banquets.

Dr. Mitchell believes that the best single index of the lowly position of agriculture is in the ratio of farm per capita income, to the per capita income of the total population. In 1919 the average farm dweller was receiving 57 per cent as much income as the average American. In 1921 the ratio dropped to 34 per cent. Now it has climbed to about 40 per cent—still far short of 1919. In the face of this depressing testimony it is pertinent to inquire how farmers continue to exist at all. As a matter of fact, many of them have ceased to exist—as farmers. Nearly a million (net) left their farms for the city between 1920 and 1927. Six million remain.

WASHINGTO

WASHINGTON, Jan.

A NEW fight is on to obtain enact of a Sunday blue law bill for the tional capital. Evidences of agitation are appearing already. The hope is capital may be made of President Hoo declarations favorable to Washington "model city" in the matter of law enf ment.

Should the blue law advocates be suc ful in their attempts to make Washingt closed town on Sundays, they would be couraged to expand their activities.

Washington has Sunday baseball theaters. It is the one day in the week the vast army of Government workers find entertainment and relaxation from humdrum of departmental desks, and to prive them of it would seem a tragedy.

OLD COURTHOUSE IN COUNTY DERIDED IN POETS' WORDS

Grand Jury Quotes Poe and Byron to Describe Its Musty Odors and Its Buggy Jail.

LIKENS IT TO "NIOBE OF NATIONS"

Ascribes to It the "Faintly Discernible but Pestilent" Atmosphere of the House of Usher.

In casting about for pungent phrases to condemn the ill-smelling and decrepit St. Louis County Courthouse as a place unfit to house the public offices of a prosperous community, the St. Louis County grand jury for the September term yesterday in its final report wept with the muse over the decaying structure.

When the grand jury had finished its inspection of the old building, erected in 1877, when the county population was 25,000, the author of the report wrote that the aging structure suggested "the stricture of penury, the pinch of poverty, the atmosphere of want, like the gloomy atmosphere on the House of Usher."

Only the melancholy Poe, from whose work that quotation was taken, could have pictured such gloom or the grand jury's despair at meditating upon the quarters for the county's public offices.

After intoning a dirge of pestilential odors from stale disinfectants, cramped quarters of public officials and prisoners in the common pail, the writer wound up his report with this from Byron's "Child Harold's Pilgrimage":

The Niobe of nations, there she stands,
Childless and crownless in her voiceless woe:
An empty urn within her withered hands,
Whose holy dust was scattered long ago.

Denounced in Detail.

The report opens fire upon the old Courthouse with the approach from without, where at first glance one suffers "a sense of limitation, of stricture, like growth prematurely stopped." Then, the report continues:

"Enter, and the shuffling clods of leather soles on board floors mingled with the drone of countless voices greets the ear. The air reeks with the smell of stale disinfectants and human odors, confined for want of ventilation, giving a sense of oppression suggestive of suffocation and in this atmosphere our Judges and various county officers with an army of clerks must attend to the county's business."

The musty courtrooms on the second floor are dealt with as cramped quarters for the trial of cases; the Sheriff's offices are tucked away into one corner, with no facilities and little room in which to transact the business of that office, while the Prosecuting Attorney's offices offer no privacy for the interviewing of important witnesses nor have those offices space for a law library or other equipment in keeping with the dignity of that office. And there is no place to take care of prospective jurors or witnesses, who perforce must mingle with the "flotsam and jetsam that is attracted to court trials."

Bugs Abound in Jail.

The lower floors fare no better in the report, and the jail is found insanitary and ill-smelling, where bugs abound and stifling conditions obtain. The grand jury does not recommend hotel accommodations for prisoners, the report hastens to explain, but all are not felons who enter jails and many are found innocent. Yet these must dwell with felons in the filth of the county jail.

Sworn in last Sept. 26, the grand jury heard 72 witnesses in 26 sessions and returned 17 true bills. One of its recommendations is the careful preservation of grand jury notes for future reference. This grand jury could not find notes of a previous grand jury.

The report acknowledges able assistance given by the Sheriff's and Prosecuting Attorney's offices.

Judge Lashly complimented the grand jury for its work and its report.

Bond Issues Always Beaten.

The bond issue providing for construction of a new courthouse and jail have been defeated by the voters in the last five years. In 1925 the proposal for a new courthouse and jail was submitted with an item for good roads. Both were defeated. In 1927 the proposal was submitted with bond issue items for good roads, parks and a hospital. Only the hospital item carried.

The grand jury was composed of Louis H. Egan, 20 Brentmoor place, president of the Union Electric Light and Power Co., foreman; Joseph Messmer, Kirkwood; W. L. Behan, University City; R. J. Higgins, 7210 Normandy place; E. B. Mitchell, Maplewood; Otto Stoecker, Manchester; Emil Earley, Jefferson Barracks; George J. Bopp, Webster Groves; Fred W. Kamp, Bellefontaine and Shepley; Arthur J. Lee, Ferguson; Christ Ruehl, Clayton, and George Kroening, Gumbo.

The grand jury does not recommend hotel accommodations for prisoners, the report hastens to explain, but all are not felons who enter jails and many are found innocent. Yet these must dwell with felons in the filth of the county jail.

Sworn in last Sept. 26, the grand jury heard 72 witnesses in 26 sessions and returned 17 true bills. One of its recommendations is the careful preservation of grand jury notes for future reference. This grand jury could not find notes of a previous grand jury.

The report acknowledges able assistance given by the Sheriff's and Prosecuting Attorney's offices.

Judge Lashly complimented the grand jury for its work and its report.

Bond Issues Always Beaten.

The bond issue providing for construction of a new courthouse and jail have been defeated by the voters in the last five years. In 1925 the proposal for a new courthouse and jail was submitted with an item for good roads. Both were defeated. In 1927 the proposal was submitted with bond issue items for good roads, parks and a hospital. Only the hospital item carried.

The grand jury was composed of Louis H. Egan, 30 Brentmoor place, president of the Union Electric Light and Power Co., foreman; Joseph Messmer, Kirkwood; W. L. Behan, University City; R. J. Higgins, 7210 Normandy place; E. B. Mitchell, Maplewood; Otto Stoecker, Manchester; Emil Earley, Jefferson Barracks; George J. Bopp, Webster Groves; Fred W. Kamp, Bellefontaine and Shepley; Arthur J. Lee, Ferguson; Christ Ruehl, Clayton, and George Kroeming, Gumbo.

Proposes Changes in English Divorce Laws

natic may be unable to marry; but it does not necessarily disqualify a person who is mentally afflicted. Such a one may marry and the other spouse realize the situation too late. The law will also tell him or her that it is too late. There is no redress. It may be objected: but surely the relatives would warn the spouse. Nothing is more certain than that relatives will, as a rule, do nothing to cast aspersions on their own sanity. The other person learns the truth, if at all from others and usually in such cases learns it too late.

There was a young professional man who married a charming girl. On their honeymoon he learned that she was mentally unstable. Gradually he found out that her parents knew of it, but were unwilling to spoil her matrimonial chances. He was fond of his wife. Whenever she was fit to be free, he looked after her with tender devotion, though her suspicion that she would be "put away" embittered their life together. At last she sank and after a few months' terrible anxiety she died. He was a strong man, but within three months he too was dead. His ordeal had worn him out, a sacrifice to her relatives' natural desire "not to stand in the girl's way." Had he been warned, he would perhaps have done precisely the same as he did, but he would have done it with knowledge. In such cases, the sane party is saddled with a marriage which is in no sense a mating and the law gives no relief.

There is, further, the case of a man or woman who commits the criminal act of marrying while suffering from disease in a communicable form. Such a monster, unless he or she commits subsequent adultery, can and does hold the innocent party to the union. The law allows it and the Court awards it. Yet, from such marriages can only come disease and misery. The promise of offspring is blighted. Happy indeed is the spouse who escapes contamination. From such unions come monsters and imbeciles useless to the state, an anxiety and expense to the parents. How can religion uphold such a union? Why should the law enforce the obligations of marriage when one party so callously disregards the ordinary canons of decency?

Law Sees No Alarm.

Indeed, it may be contended that such persons who thus defile the sacrament should be repelled by the church, that religion should abhor the sin of one who presumes to deceive an innocent party frustrating one of the most holy objects of the institution. But the law, inheriting and continuing the old rules, sees no cause for alarm. The parties are competent; they have gone through the prescribed form. Caveat spousa! All is well and the blessing of God is invoked on this mockery. Whom God hath joined let no man put asunder—not even if the union be brought about by deceit and is defeated in its inception.

The most serious case of hardship resulting from our existing divorce laws is that of the deserted woman. The husband has left her, almost invariably to join another woman; in any case, he has deliberately elected to dissolve in fact a union which has become distasteful or irksome to him and his wife is left bound in law, but unmarried in fact. She cannot form another union recognized by the law. She must perforce live that celibate life which she has decided, and rightly decided, is unsuited to her. It may be said: "Well, She can get a divorce for adultery." Yes, she can if she can prove it, but most deserted wives have neither time nor the means nor the opportunity even of ascertaining the whereabouts of her peccant spouse. He may be in the same town, or elsewhere in the realm, or he may have emigrated. In the working and lower middle classes, he is untraceable save by chance, and the tantalizing remedy of divorce is held perpetually just before her eyes. She may even be bound though he is dead, because he has passed beyond the bounds of her knowledge. He is dead to her, save that she is held in bond.

What is such a woman to do? Her husband has freed himself from his obligations, has committed a fundamental breach of the primary duty of a husband, and yet the detriment falls upon her, who does not desire to live alone, distinguished only from the unmarried by a ring, the shadow of a name, which only keeps alive the memory of a wrong. Often indeed there are children, the whole burden of whom is cast upon her. Such a woman, overwhelmed with the problems of life and deprived of the companionship, help and sympathy to which she is entitled from the society of her husband, is not comforted or aided nor is the state nor religion benefited by the circumstances that she remains married and consequently can only form a new alliance which the law will not recognize.

Separation No Remedy.

It is said that she need not marry again—the adequate remedy is separation, that many separated couples come together again. Such remarks do not touch the problem. Divorce is not a remedy that must be taken. A woman who does not desire a divorce need not ask for it. Why mock a woman who is subjected to a separation in fact by offering it to her as a means of redressing that wrong? Separation may be a salutory means of bringing to their senses couples who treat matrimony as a battle ground. Separation is no true remedy for the deserted. In their case the union is in fact dissolved by the fundamental breach of its obligations by the other party and the law should recognize that it is for the injured party who desires married life but whose spouse has deliberately thwarted that lawful and proper desire shall no longer be faced with the dilemma "Shall I be spinster or mistress? Wife I can never be, because I am a wife."

Then there is the case of a married pair one of whom so behaves that it is unsafe for the other to continue marital relations because to do so involves risk to mind or body such that no one ought to be asked to run it.

Ought a woman to be forced to continue to be the wife of a man when, in justice to herself and to posterity, she must refuse him all marital rights? Ought a man to be bound to give the status and title of wife to a woman who cannot with any safety be admitted to matrimonial intimacy? The law recognizes that this ought not to be where disease has been contracted during marriage as a result of adultery. In all other cases the wronged party is solemnly sentenced to celibacy by reason of the fault of the other. When the penalty falls on the wrong party by reason of the provisions of the law, then the law is unjust.

At Expense of Wife.

There is a type who is not averse to profit gained at the expense of his wife's virtue. In the lower walks of life such a husband often forces his wife into prostitution. Ought a woman to be forced by law to remain the wife of such a man? She may or may not be a victim. If she is as depraved as her husband she is beyond help, but if she is a victim then the law which denies her redress is cruel and unmeaning. If he misconducts himself then she can obtain relief, but if he forces her to commit acts which are wholly inconsistent with her status as a wife that fundamental breach of the relationship entitles her to sympathy and no more. It is cruel to say that she can leave him. She has elected to be a wife. She desires the security of married life. She has been foully wronged and injured in that relation, and the law mocks her by saying that she can cease to be wife in all that matters, but she must remain a wife tied to a filthy beast to whom marriage has no meaning.

Rules of divorce, which compel decent folk to live celibate, against their will, or to contract unions unsanctioned by the law, are cruel and unjust.

In a similar condition are those who are the victims of habitual drunkards. There was a man once married to such a woman. Their home was filthy. Their furniture was sold for drink. Time after time he reformed the house. As often as he did so, so often did she sell it. Some of her children were born in prison Several died whose lives might be saved. His life was one unceasing misery, but he could obtain no redress. She did not commit adultery. One night he came home to find again, as on there was nothing to eat and no money to buy food. On this occasion he for once lost his temper. An unlucky blow brought him into the dock charged with murder. He went to prison for manslaughter and his children went to the workhouse. For all of them it was a change for the better. Why say that he could have left her? So he could, but he could not maintain himself and his children without setting up a new home with a woman in charge and in his station of life he could not hire a housekeeper. He might have maintained a wife. Who was the guilty party—the husband or the law which forced him to continue such a union?

His case is typical of many, though they do not often find their way into the criminal courts as he did. The wife of a habitual drunkard is in equal misery. Inevitably she has to face nights of terror, shut up alone with a man who has deprived himself of restraint and subject to any torture that his drunken humor may suggest to him. It is not enough to say that they can separate. Permanent separation is a cessation of matrimony. A separation order recognizes that it is not unreasonable to force a man or woman to continue married life in such circumstances. It may be that the injured party does not desire divorce. In such cases the remedy in fact is at hand. It is not necessary to go to law to obtain a separation. A party who withdraws from such a life cannot be forced back to it, and if he or she thinks that departure for a time will effect a radical improvement, so be it. The cases for which divorce is demanded are not these.

Wedded to Convict.

There is another class of victims whose fate is hard. A man or a woman may commit murder and be sentenced to death. The law has claimed a forfeit, and if it is paid, the culprit's wife or husband is free. The union is dissolved by death at the hand of the law. But sentence of death is not the last word. There is a prerogative of mercy which may even at the last moment stay the execution. The reprieved felon then passes into prison on a life sentence, rarely, if ever, commuted in less than 20 years. But the mercy which is extended to the offender has a further effect. He ceases to be dead in law and his marriage continues. But for that executive act, the other spouse, the innocent party, would have been able if she so desired to forget the past in another marriage to which not even the most rigid opponent of divorce would withhold his sanction. Now she is held bound. The act that lengthens her husband's life sterilizes hers, and she has no hope, no chance even of a supervening cause of divorce, when the man is secluded from all opportunity of sexual misconduct. Her fate is not considered by the Home Secretary. It would not even be right for him to do so, but she at least ought to be able, if she desires, to obtain by decree that freedom to remarry that the rope would have given her. But the law says no.

There are many men and women who are alone in the world for another reason. They are tied to spouses who are incurably insane. The law recognizes that insanity is a bar to marriage, but only in a limited degree. It does not recognize that insanity in a form that would wholly prevent the patient from contracting marriage at all is a cause for terminating a contracted marriage where the disease is made manifest after the relationship has been established. It has been proposed that incurable insanity shall be a ground for divorce. The patient is not and cannot be harmed by such a decree. The sane party is tied for life. Many insane people live to a ripe age. The other out in the world anxious and willing to play a proper part in the life of the nation is forbidden to do so because of a union which exists only in law and can never be resumed. Many medical men take a strong line as to insanity where criminal responsibility is concerned. It may well be that the case of a person married to one who is intermittently insane demands the same remedy. It is at least worthy of consideration whether any insane person should have the liberty to propagate his species. But there can be no doubt that marriage with an incurably insane person is no marriage at all, and to maintain it as a bar to the marriage of the sane and healthy party is of no advantage to anyone and a detriment to the state. The compulsory legal loneliness brought about in such cases by the law of divorce is a needless cruelty.

Celibacy or Sin.

It may be said but what about the patient? Is he or she to be left without means and without care? The answer is: not at all. The law has always recognized that the physical welfare of an insane person must be provided for, even at the expense of creditors. If the insane person's fortune is insufficient for his maintenance, and the other party can contribute to that maintenance, there is and should be no reason why the obligation should pass with the marriage. What is intolerable is that the living dead should exist as husband or wife only to confront the other with the dilemma: Celibacy or sin.

I may perhaps cite the words that I used in Rutherford versus Richardson (1923) A. C. 1. It will be remembered that the effect of the decision was to leave Mrs. Rutherford bound in matrimony. The law left no option and in reluctantly giving effect to the principles which govern her case I said: "It is an unfortunate circumstance that she should thus be tied for life to a dangerous, violent and homicidal lunatic, after having for many years suffered, both in body and in spirit, from his unfaithfulness and his cruelty. He is 41 years of age and she is 40. We need take little account of his feelings. As regards her, we are bound to note that during many more years, unless death remove him or release her, she must look forward to a loneliness from which she can escape only by a violation of the moral law. To some this may appear a harsh, and even an inhuman, result, but such is the law of England. Your lordship cannot, because of the sympathy you must all feel for this unhappy victim of our marriage laws, impeach the chastity of a woman, equally innocent, who also is entitled to the sympathy and shelter of the law. The true remedy lies outside any court of law; it lies beyond the scope of your lordship's faculties, sitting as the supreme appellate tribunal. It rests with Parliament (if and when it thinks proper) to end a state of things which in a civilized community and in the name of morality, imposes such an intolerable hardship upon innocent men and women."

Says Dissension Weakens Germany

on articles of consumption, is one of the events of the present hard times that would never before have been regarded as possible. But further increases of indirect taxation will have to follow.

No Chance for Tax Cut.

On the other hand, one may ask why at least for the present the plan of lowering certain taxes should not be abolished. Such reductions, which would naturally be well-adapted for the accumulation of capital at home and perhaps would also bring back to Germany capital taken abroad, can be postponed until better times come. Just at this time, when the task is to bring order into the budget and the state's finances, the talk of reducing taxes is highly grotesque. The new Minister of Finance, Dr. Moldenhauer, although himself a member of the German People's party, has proposed that any reduction of taxes be postponed until 1931.

The German cabinet has fortunately avoided the often prophesied cabinet crisis. It will now have to show whether it is made up of men who place the welfare of the state above party interests; far-seeing men who know what is required by the present if the future of the German people and the world is to be a lot happier.

79TH BIRTHDAY OF TRINITY M. E. CHURCH

Founded on New Year's Eve in Log Cabin Home of One of Its First Members.

On New Year's eve, 1851, 12 men, with their families, assembled in the log cabin home of D. H. Mitchell at Second and Locust streets. There, just at midnight, they formed the Mounds Chapel, and the Rev. Nathan Schumate, a roving Methodist minister, was chosen as their pastor.

Tonight the congregation now known as Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, at Thirteenth and Tyler streets, will celebrate its seventy-ninth anniversary with a birthday party.

For several months the tiny congregation continued to hold Sunday worship in Mitchell's home, but presently moved to the Mounds Engine Hall, St. Louis' frist fire department.

Four years later, with a congregation of 103, the church moved to a two-story farme building at Thirteenth and Benton streets and changed its name to Simpson Chapel. It took its name from Bishop Simpson at that time a foreign missionary.

In 1870, Simpson Chapel united with Hedding Chapel, the second Methodist Episcopal Church to be formed in St. Louis, and moved into a new frame and stone building at Tenth and North Market streets. This church, which cost $1000 to build, was known as "Little Jim" because of its size. It contained three rooms.

In 1916 the church changed its name to Trinity and moved into its present site. This new edifice was built at a cost of $20,000.

At the birthday party tonight there will be a huge cake, four feet wide and three feet high, surmounted by a model of the present church in icing and surrounded by 79 candles. The Rev. Ross W. Adair, present pastor, will officiate at the services.

TO BE TAKEN TO CALIFORNIA ON BANK ROBBERY CHARGE

Governor Grants Requisition for William Curtis, Held in Jail Since Dec. 5.

A requisition for return to California for trial as a bank robber of William Curtis, held in the City Jail since Dec. 5 on a charge of rifling apartment house mail boxes, was granted by Gov. Caulfield at Jefferson City yesterday.

Curtis, who is 26 years old, is wanted as one of three men who held up a branch of the Bank of California in Los Angeles, Sept. 16, last, stealing $10,271. He was arrested in an apartment house at 4502 Olive street where, it is charged, he was caught looting a mail box. According to police, Curtis, when surprised, resorted to the trick of representing himself as a war veteran attempting to sell envelopes of sachet powder for 10 cents apiece.

VOTE RECOUNT IN 27TH WARD

Check on Committeeman Election to Start Monday.

The Board of Election Commissioners will begin a recount tomorrow of the votes cast for Republican City Committeeman in the Twenty-seventh Ward at the election in August, 1928. On the face of the returns Henry W. Dawson was elected committeeman by 37 votes, receiving a reported total of 2272 votes to 2235 for his opponent, George J. Weber.

Weber contested the election and the protest has been in the courts since then. Recently the Supreme Court ordered a recount. As there will be another election of City Committeeman next August, Weber, if he were adjudged the victor in the recount, would have only a short time to serve in office.

COMMERCE CHAMBER DINNER NEXT THURSDAY

Oficers to Be Installed and 1930 Program Outlined—Governor to Speak.

The program of the annual dinner of the Chamber of Commerce, to be held Thursday night at Hotel Jefferson, will include induction of new officers and directors, a review of 1929 activities and a forecast for 1930, as well as several addresses.

The speaking program, it was announced yesterday, will include addresses by Erastus Wells, new chairman of the board of the Chamber; Gov. Caulfield, Mayor Miller, Congressman Dyer, and Walter B. Weisenburger, president of the Chamber, who will outline the 1930 program. Louis H. Egan will be chairman.

An attendance of about 1000 civic, business and professional leaders is expected. Legislators, judges, members of the Board of Aldermen and the City Plan Commission and heads of municipalities in the St. Louis trade area have been invited to attend. Dinner will be served at 6:45 o'clock with the program on a fixed schedule because of arrangements to broadcast the addresses over Station KMOX.

The meeting will close with the formal unveiling of Frank Nuderscher's painting, "The Growing City," which recently received the Chamber's prize for the best industrial art scene entered in the St. Louis Artists' Guild Exhibition.

Fire at 4516 Easton Avenue.

TOLL-FREE ST. CHARLES BRIDGE IN 1931 LIKELY

Chairman Hodgon of Committee Operating Span Renews Prediction—Revenue Rises.

A renewed prediction that tolls will not be charged on the highway bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles after this year was made yesterday by Probate Judge Hodgdon of St. Louis County, chairman of the St. Charles Free Bridge Committee, in commenting on the increasing traffic, as shown by the semiannual report.

Since taking the bridge over from a private company in the summer of 1926, for $1,250,000, the citizens' committee has been making payment by retiring the corporation's securities out of net earnings from tolls. Approximately $350,000 remains to be paid, and Judge Hodgdon thinks this can be accomplished in 1930, in view of the increasing traffic and diminishing interest requirements on the principal.

For the last half of 1929, the committee made a principal payment of $151,429.50, as compared with $81,055 for the first half, during which $30,000 had to be spent for a new floor for the bridge. Interest paid during the year amounted to $30,449.23.

People used to wonder if Bayer Aspirin was harmful. Doctors answered that question years ago. It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled! For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Bayer Aspirin for relief.

COLLINSVILLE MINER DIES; WAS SHOT BY POLICEMAN

John J. Negra Resisted Arrest and Drew Revolver to Fire, Officer Gerbig Reports.

John J. Negra, 50 years old, an unemployed Collinsville coal miner, died yesterday at St. Mary's Hospital, East St. Louis, from bullet wounds inflicted by a Collinsvile policeman when he resisted arrest Friday afternoon.

He was shot twice in the abdomen by Patrolman William Gerbig, who was directing traffic at Main and Center streets and who left his post to stop Negra for questioning when he saw him passing.

The patrolman was taking Negra to the station, he reported, when Negra drew a revolver and attempted to fire, whereupon the policeman drew his own weapon and shot the prisoner.

Chief of Police Long said Negra had been arrested recently for shooting during a row in a soft-drink place. He was being sought on a report that he had been posing as a prohibition agent.

SUES TO SAVE LIFE POLICY HE ORIGINATED

Agent Alleges Effort Is Being Made to Coerce Firm to Drop It.

Suit to prevent an insurance company from ceasing to issue a policy which he originated and which insurance holders have cashed in policies in other companies to buy, was filed in Circuit Court yesterday by James B. Sullivan, owner of an insurance agency in the Ambassador Building.

The practice of persuading insurance holders to dispose of their policies and apply the cash on other policies, is known in insurance circles as "twisting." It was censured by the State Insurance Department in a recent ruling.

Sullivan in his suit charges that other insurance companies, suffering from inroads made by sale of the "emancipator policy," which he originated, and which the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co. of Fort Wayne, Ind., issues, have organized through their agents to coerce the Lincoln company into withdrawing the "emancipator policy" from the market. Sullivan asks an injunction to prevent the Lincoln company from complying with the alleged coercion.

According to the petition, the policy permits the accumulation of separate cash reserves which the company compounds at 4½ per cent gauranteed interest, so that at the death of the insured, the reserves, being separate, are paid by the company in addition to the face value of the policy. It contains other features, and had proved popular among insurance buyers, Sullivan says, resulting in the petitioner's business increasing in substantial proportions from 1927 to the present. Last year, he states, his agency produced $2,400,000 of paid for insurance, of which $1,250,000 represented the "emancipator plan."

The suit charges an association of insurance agents organized by other companies has complained to the State Insurance Department of alleged improper methods pursued by Sullivan and also has threatened to secure the expulsion of the defendant company from two prominent life insurance organizations known as the Life Presidents' Association and the American Life Convention.

On account of such pressure, the suit charges, the Lincoln company is about to take action which will stop the plaintiff and his agents from reaping the benefits of his plan, thus demoralizing, if not ruining his business. He is represented by the law firm of Judson, Green, Henry & Remmers and Carroll W. Harlan.

"Twisting," according to officers of the National Association of Life Underwriters, constitutes a drain upon life insurance reserves. The association plans to introduce legislation to make the practice unlawful in Missouri.

His Singing Sounds Like Rudy Vallee's

WILL OSBORNE

WHO is the Columbia chain's counter to the popularity that the NBC network is building up for Rudy Vallee. He is not scheduled over KMOX, but may be heard at 10 P. M. Tuesdays on WABC, WBBM, WOWO, WFBM and KMBC, and at 10:30 Thursdays on WABC, WFBM and KMBC.

SO SIMILAR is the singing of Will Osborne, who is featured with his orchestra by the Columbia System, to that of Rudy Vallee, that apparently many listeners have come to believe that he is Valee broadcasting under an assumed name.

As a matter of fact, Osborne's slow orchestral rhythm and crooning style of singing were first heard on the air in December, 1925, when he directed his orchestra in the studio of a New York station.

Osborne, who was born in Toronto, Can., went to New York six years ago. He played the drums in a school orchestra at St. Andrews College, Toronto.

"During the first few years, I had little or no success," Osborne said. "My own orchestra was formed about four and a half years ago. I could never work successfully for anyone else.

His slow rhythm orchestrations were laughed at by other musicians, mainly because his ideas were contrary to those prevalent.

"As soon as I found myself at the head of an organization my troubles were even greater." Osborne confessed, "since I had all my own men to win over, and that was no easy matter.

"I wanted to eliminate heavy arrangements which the public is forced to listen to on every side, and to simplify the playing of dance music so that it could be appreciated without any great effort by listeners.

"To this end, I played only choruses of the popular numbers, and instead, of playing one number to a dance, I grouped nine and 10 together, making a half-hour or so of a session without any lull.

"Then, to make our music more appealing, and, permit people to converse without raising their voices, I did away with the brass section, substituting violins and a string bass in place of the tuba, finally toning down the whole as much as possible without loss of rhythm or melody.

"Finally the question of tempo came up. Every other band in the country was playing wild fox trots in the most frantic fashion. So, to carry out my ideas farther, I slowed down my tempo wherever a number lent itself to such treatment. I will admit it sounded draggy at first, since the boys were not used to playing such rhythms and the members of my orchestra were not in accord with the idea and naturally did not give me their full co-operation.

"This new rhythm was a great contrast to the style all the other bands were using at the time. Consequently, many people could not dance to our music. The result was that I lost a few 'jobs,' but I stuck to my ideas and refused to 'jazz it up.'

"I had confidence, for I felt the need of a change toward something less frantic, more soothing, yet retaining all the essentials of a modern dance orchestra.

"It was hard going for a long time, but I happened on a pianist (Frank Comiskey) with kindred ideas. I immediately engaged him and from then on I was not alone in the battle. Later I was fortunate enough to get Paul Dennicker, another pianist, who, since he came with me, has written some real song hits, among these 'Sposin',' 'Perhaps,' 'The World's Greatest Sweetheart,' and others.

"It remained for someone else to succeed first with the idea I was working on, but it showed that I was not wrong."

Osborne has written "I Knew We Two Were One," "Beside an Open Fireplace" and other songs.

Court Decides WENR Should Get More Time on Air

A court decision that is likley to prove of great interest to listeners in the Middle West is that just handed down by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, in favor of WENR, the 50,000-watt Chicago station, in its fight for more time on the air. Because of other legal steps, the decision is not likely to affect WENR for some time.

At present WENR shares time with WLS, Chicago, being permitted by the Federal Radio Commission to broadcast only two-sevenths of the time. The court decision is interpreted as an order that WENR get half time on the channel it shares with WLS.

WENR is operated by the Great Lakes Broadcasting Co. a subsidiary of the Samuel Insull public utility interests. Its studios are to be in the new Chicago Civic Opera building, and its $500,000 plant has the backing of great wealth and of artistic circles. WLS, which is owned by Sears-Roebuck and operated by the Prairie Farmer, a farm magazine, has always specialized in programs directed especially at the rural listeners. Both stations have become widely popular.

The court, in deciding the case, which was an appeal from the Radio Commissoin's time sharing decree, took the ground that the public utility connections of WENR's owners and operators had nothing to do with the matter, as WENR's programs had made it one of the country's foremost stations.

The fight involved WCBD, operated by Wilbur Glenn Voliva at Zion City, Ill. But the court held that the Radio Commission was justified in limiting this station to daytime broadcasting on another wave length.

Third Day of Tour by Motorcar to Florida

Into the Lookout Mountain Country and Chattanooga—Stone Mountain and Its Heroic Sculpture on the Route—Highway Passes Through Chickamauga Battlefield.

MRS. KIRKSEY, who is motoring with her two small children from St. Louis to Florida, herewith gives her impressions of the third day's trp. This article was written at Griffin, Ga. Her next story will appear next Sunday.

By Helen Kirksey.

HO hum, or as we say in Georgia, "I decleah!" Atlanta was so busy today we rode right through. It was the easiest thing to do and down here in Dixie people do mostly what is the least trouble. It seemed like rank mutiny not to stop even long enough to pay honor to Atlanta's fame by drinking a "dope," but Griffin was only 45 miles ahead of us and fried chicken was our goal. We are literally eating our way through the South. Ever since our first night's stop out of St. Louis at Henderson, Ky., we have sat down to absolute flotillas of food—a super-dreadnaught of fried springer with a cruiser of gravy alongside, a formidable fleet of small dishes bearing everything from celery to pie a la mode, including five different vegetables and three kinds of beans. Incessant firing of hot biscuits retard your attack on the main line, and if you look you are lost. You are overwhelmed by the aspect and you don't know whether to dive into the middle or nibble around the edges.

The car is running perfectly, and why not? It requires only the attention necessary under any circumstances. The oil and gas must be watched, of course, and the tires checked regularly. I keep my lights burning for a part of each day to save the battery. It is amusing how many people down here have time to tell you by shouts or signals that your lights are on. Anywhere else in the country they let you find out for yourself, somehow, and sometimes HOW!

There has been no occasion for me to need help on this trip, but help is not remote if I should want it. There are no spots of utter desolation on the road because it is well traveled and gas stations and garages are frequent enough to keep one reassured. We haven't seen a stranded car since we left St. Louis. There are not so many hikers down here as in the Middle West, and they seldom ask you but often give you a chance to invite them for a lift. They don't make faces at you, either, for passing them by.

Pass Lookout Mountain.

Leaving Sewanee, Tenn., this morning we took up U. S. Route 41 again at Monteagle, and rolled down out of the mountains with the mist. It was just such a mist, I imagine, that named the Battle of Lookout Mountain "the battle above the clouds." Lookout stands about 1000 feet right up out of Tennessee on the Tennessee River at Chattanooga, and the city lies between Lookout and Signal Mountain. On the summit of Signal is a delightful inn where one can stop in picturesque surroundings with the advantage of being practically in the city.

Do you remember the movie "The General," that classic of the Civil War that Buster Keaton made? The old locomotive, the "General," stands in the Union Station at Chattanooga, and though it is a mechanical oddity now it has a look of courtliness, and one feels sure that if it were out for a run and met an automobile at a crossing it would certainly stop and bow for the ladies to cross first.

We followed the route through Chattanooga towards Atlanta by way of Dalton instead of Rome. It is the better road, and anyway Rome is a disappointment. There aren't any goober feathers for the king's pillow there, after all. The way out of Chattanooga to Dalton takes you past Fort Oglethorpe and through the Chickamaugua battlefield. Like Gettysburg, Chickamaugua has the old guns in their original positions, with bronze plates describing the action that took place.

By this time we were in the cotton country, but the fields are bare at this season and the only active signs are the textile and thread mills. We stopped at Cartersville for lunch, not only because we know what a good hotel is there but I had a secret hope that a waiter there would call me "young miss" again, like one did last year. Wouldn't you consider that worth at least 'to' bits?

I wonder why conversation always turns to big league baseball when you round Kennesaw Mountain. Oh, yes, of course, Judge Landis, but the resemblance is so vague, even now. It was at Kenne-

Motor Trip From St. Louis to Palm Beach, Fla., Is Shortened

Completion of New Georgia Highway Between Atlanta and Tennessee Line Cuts Down Driving Time by Two to Three Days.

St. Louis to Palm Beach, Fla., by motor in three days is now feasible, with the completion, a month ago, of the new Georgia highway between Atlanta and the Tennessee line near Chattanooga.

Persons wishing to drive to Florida, and not spend a lot of time on the road, will find they are able to cut down their running time materially this year. The writer has just made a trip to Palm Beach from St. Louis, making it in three days. The return trip was longer, several stop-overs being made. Prior to this season the writer has never been able to make the trip in less than four days, and on one or two occasions it required five or six days.

The three-day trip does not contemplate relief drivers and 18-hour stretches at the wheel. The distance to Palm Beach is slightly more than 1400 miles. It may be divided into three drives of between 400 and 500 miles, which are not difficult, present road conditions considered.

To make the trip in that time, however, one must drive between 50 and 60 miles an hour continuously, when road conditions permit, and be prepared to be on the go for 10 to 12 hours a day.

In the first place, the motorists in a hurry to get to Florida will disregard recommendations that the trip be started by traveling Illinois Route 12 to Vincennes, Ind., then picking up U. S. 41 down through Evansville, Ind., Henderson, Ky., Hopkinsville, Ky., and Clarksville, Tenn.

That routing forces the use of about 100 miles of not particularly good gravel and poor macadam between Henderson and Nashville, Tenn. It is gravel most of the way from Henderson to Hopkinsville. From Clarksville to Nashville the motorist is routed over and old, worn out, crooked macadam road. The writer came back via that route, so knows how conditions are at present.

The better and speedier route out of St. Louis is Illinois 15 to Ashley Junction, Illinois 2 to Carbondale, Illinois 13 to Harrisburg and Illinois 1 to Metropolis, where there is a left turn around the courthouse to pick up a nine-mile gravel road, in good condition, leading to the bridge across the Ohio into Paducah, Ky. It looks like going out of the way to go east to Harrisburg and then double back down to Metropolis, but it really isn't much farther and saves time.

From Paducah the route leads down U. S. 45 to Mayfield, then U. S. 43 to Paris, Tenn. It's a mixture of gravel and macadam, all good. At Paris one branches off on a short cut through Big Sandy to Camden, Tenn. It is shown as unimproved road on maps, but it really is good gravel and very smooth. It is about 40 miles from Paris to Camden. At Camden the motorist ferries the Tennessee River and picks up Tennessee route No. 1, all-new concrete into Nashville.

From Nashville one follows U. S. 41 to Lake City, Fla. It is all paved, except seven miles between

Auto Display In New York Shows Trend Toward '8s'

23 Manufacturers Offer This Type, While 28 Are Building "Sixes"—Two Foreign Cars Shown — 16 - Cylinder Car Attracts Attention—Price Changes Indicate Competitive Year.

By ROBERT L. BRADLEY,
Automobile Editor.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—At the thirtieth annual automobile show which broke all attendance records here this week, a bewildering display of entirely new motor cars was proof of the tremendous strides made by the industry in the last 12 months. Of particular interest was the trend toward eight-cylinder motors and four-speed transmissions. But although the new cars presented many mechanical improvements, the passing visitor was chiefly concerned, with the recent developments in body design and coloring.

A huge, American-made 16-cylinder car shared the spotlight with the two foreign exhibits—the Voisin and the Mercedes-Benz. A six-cylinder front wheel drive car manufactured in St. Louis joined the two other front drive machines, both eights. Several manufacturers, whose names for more than a decade have been associated with six-cylinder automobiles, deserted that classification, turning to eights.

Price revisions, upward for the most part, foreshadowed one of the most competitive years in the motor car industry's youthful history.

Thousands of persons were attracted to a private showing of the American Austin, bantam cousin of the English small car. A representative of the Austin company revealed to the writer that the car will sell for less than $450, f. o. b. the factory at Butler, Pa., which will place it definitely below the two lowest priced American cars. In appearance the Austin is almost an exact replica of standard American cars, with smoothly streamlined body and conventional hood, radiator and fenders.

The eight-cylinder engine has sprung into wide favor, 23 automobile manufacturers now offering eights, as against 28 with six-cylinder products. Several companies are building both sixes and eights.

Seven makes of sixes and seven of eights employ the four-speed gearset, while one make features a three-speed transmission with a silent second.

Another mechanical development that is finding favor is the down-draft principle of carburetion, which utilizes the pull of gravity in feeding the fuel mixture to the motor.

A tendency toward unit construction of automobile bodies was worthy of note. Hood louvres are inclining toward the horizontal design. Startling contrasts between the color of the fenders and of the bodies, so conspicuous in the early months of 1929, were absent. Colors were, if anything, a trifle more subdued and harmonious than in the past, except on sports models.

Many Innovations.

Pioneered by one of the large manufacturers, the narrow radiator shell has been almost universally adopted. Another innovation, which might seem an insignificant detail, yet which affects every driver, is the three-spoke steering wheel, replacing the old four-spoke type on many of the new models.

One characteristic of the 1930 cars was the fine appearance of the cars, the entire chassis and body appearing to be a unit rather than a conglomeration of units stuck together haphazardly.

The quality of the appearances of the materials used to furnish the interiors of the cars is finer. Rayon is widely used in upholstery and decoration. Mohair, broadcloth, corduroy and whipcord, with their long-wearing qualities, have a strong appeal to feminine owners and drivers.

Increased prices have already been announced by Buick, Marquette, Cadillac, LaSalle, Chrysler, Graham, Nash, Studebaker and Viking, while reductions have been placed in effect by Auburn, Ford, Chevrolet and on the new Oakland "eight." Within the next week one large manufacturer will announce a decrease on his higher-priced product and an increase on his lower-priced car.

Oldsmobile 'Six' For 1930 Combines Beauty, Strength

Acceleration Improved and Bodies Made Longer and Wider.

Improvements which reflect the latest advancements in automotive engineering and new Fisher-built bodies that are more roomy and of distinctively modish lines are combined in the Oldsmobile six for 1930, which is being displayed in St. Louis for the first time at Oldsmobile-Viking dealers.

Mechanical advancements have improved both acceleration and hill climbing; have enhanced driving ease and riding comfort, and contribute to even finer and more powerful braking action. Fundamentally, however, the Oldsmobile six retains all the features which have contributed to its success, according to A. C. Williams, branch manager here of the Olds Motor Works the past two years.

In addition to new bodies, one new body type is introduced this year. This is the patrician sedan with de luxe equipment. This year all standard body types can also be obtained with five-wire-wheel equipment at slight extra cost.

The standard body types include the four-door sedan, two-door sedan, business coupe, sport coupe, phaeton and convertible roadster. These types also can be had with special or de luxe equipment.

The designers of the new Oldsmobile bodies have combined the latest trends in automotive style with lines which enhance the increased size of the cars. Bodies are wider, providing an additional inch and one-half width to the seats. This has been made possible by the new body lines and by decreasing the depth of the wheel housings. Bodies of the two-door sedan have also been lengthened one and three-quarters inches.

A new recess panel effect that outlines the windows of the closed body types is an outstanding feature of the exterior appearance of the Oldsmobile. This recess is finished in a lighter tone than are the window reveals and the remainder of the body with the result that it forms a distinctive feature of the design.

Radiator Unchanged.

The radiator shell and front of the Oldsmobile remain unchanged. However, a molding runs from the radiator along the sides of the hood and cowl to the windshield post where it blends into a side panel formed by the molding and by the lower portion of the new window recess. This panel again narrows as it passes around the rear quarters of the car.

Windshield posts have been slanted to conform to the tilted windshield glass, which is set at an angle of seven degrees to eliminate glare and reflections from the headlights of following cars. This forward slant of the posts adds to the dashing appearance of the cars and also permits the use of a distinctive curve at the forward end of the side panel.

A fully enclosed, two-shoe, pressed steel internal expanding brake has been selected for all four wheels. A high co-efficiency of brake lining is used and this is cut in a special manner to eliminate the possibility of noisy operation. This type of brake produces a high rate of deceleration with soft pedal pressure.

The hook-up of the brakes also represents a new design and combines extreme simplicity and high efficiency. The brakes are actuated by a cable control working on a single cross member located just back of the transmission housing. The cables actuating the rear wheel brakes are located on the outer side of the frame and pass into an armor covering which extends from the frame to the interior of the brake drums. The parking brake actuates all four wheels.

Steering Gear New.

The engine is of L-head design. The bore is 3 3-16 inches and the stroke 4⅛ inches, giving a displacement of 197.5 cubic inches. It develops 62 horsepower at 3000 revolutions per minute. Lubrication is by pressure feed to all main, connecting rod and camshaft bearings and to piston pins through rifle drilled connecting rods. The crankshaft is of heavy construction and operates on four large main bearings. It is both statically and dynamically balanced and is fully counterweighted to provide maximum smoothness.

Faster acceleration and improved hill climbing performance have been obtained by a change in the gear ratio from 4.41 to 4.54. Top speed remains the same.

Using six springs in the clutch has resulted in softer clutch action. The spring shackle action has been improved by using oil instead of grease, the oil being retained by a special felt pad.

A new type carburetor is employed which enhances smooth engine performance, increases gasoline economy and is easily adjusted. It is equipped with a special adjustment to increase the ease of starting in extreme cold weather. This consists of a by-pass connected with the choke and operating only when the choke is opened to the limit. The by-pass connects with the throat of the carburetor and gives an extra rich mixture when in use. The carburetor also is equipped with an acceleration pump which, being connected with the throttle, works automatically to supply a greater volume of mixture when it is required.

This year the standard body types can be had with five wire wheel equipment at $55 additional cost. The price range starts at $895 at Lansing, Mich., for the two-door standard sedan.

Local Distributer Delivers Fleet of Trucks

AMERICAN PACKING COMPANY

These four Dodge Brothers trucks, recently sold by the Milstrand Motor Co. to the American Packing Co., 3842 Garfield avenue, are part of a fleet of nine Dodge trucks owned by the company. They average 250 to 300 miles a day in country service out of St. Louis.

Willys-Overland Introduces New Commercial Line

Company Now Offers Four and Six-Cylinder Truck Models.

Speed comparable to that of passenger cars, with the power and rugged chassis construction necessary to satisfy the severest demands of modern day commercial transportation, is found in the new Willys six 1½-ton truck announced by Willys-Overland, through E. J. Johnson, Inc., local distributer. Four-speed transmission and 65 horsepower engine meet the requirements of heavy hauling and provide satisfactory performance on the highway.

Announcement of this truck, together with a new Willys-Knight truck as additions to the already large truck line manufactured by Willys-Overland, reveals a new idea in commercial car manufacture which, for the first time, gives the commercial car buyer as large a range of selection as is offered the purchaser of a passenger car.

Opportunity to select exactly the type of commercial car best fitted for any particular work is expected to make possible the replacement of many heavy duty trucks by lighter equipment, such as the Willys six, with a saving in capital invested, operating cost and depreciation, officials say.

With these two additions, Willys-Overland now offers a four-cylinder and a six-cylinder truck in the one-half ton class, the speedy new Willys six, model C 101, and the Willys-Knight, model T-103, in the ¾ to 1½-ton class, and the heavy duty Willys-Knight trucks in the 2 and 2½-ton class. In addition to these are the commercial roadsters and coupes, intended primarily as salesmen's cars and designed to permit the installation of open and closed bodies of the slip-on type.

To provide added strength, stamina and reliability, all the vital parts of Willys-Overland trucks, such as frame, transmission, clutch, propeller shaft, rear axle, wheels, rims, etc., are special truck parts.

Distribution and servicing of these trucks will be accomplished through the nation-wide Willys-Overland dealer organization, all members of which will be equipped to give specialized service on all Willys-Overland trucks, as well as to arrange for the selection and delivery of the various types of bodies desired.

This will make it possible for a truck owner to secure repairs, parts and service wherever he may be without the customary delay and is expected to be of immense value to the fleet operator who might otherwise have units of his fleet laid up where service is not available.

Hints for Winter Drivers

WHEN there is snow on the ground cutting the front wheels suddenly may throw the car into a front wheel skid.

Good contact is an important feature in sending full strength of the battery to the starter motor. For that reason it helps to press firmly on the starter switch and not, as some drivers do, just touch it lightly.

It helps to keep the car cleaner when the streets are covered with slush to accelerate when passing an approaching car. The chances of the other car splashing yours is less if you go by faster.

When using the car during a snowstorm figure on a 50 per cent increase in gas consumption. This should make provision for extra gas consumed during traffic delays.

One of the simplest and most effective ways of equalizing braking force on all four wheels is merely to use the brakes until they are warmed to a good working temperature.

Snow removal on main highways is apt to make rough shoulders look like part of the surfaced highway itself. Better drive as near the center of the road as possible.

When meeting another car in a tight place where the road is very slippery I have found it a matter of safety to guard against having the wheels spin and the car slide sidewise. It is best to keep in high gear or at least go very cautiously if in second.

The car is more likely to skid during the first few stops of the day due to the brakes being cold and thus inclined to be unequalized.

It speeds up the work of having the universal joints greased to release the holding brake before the mechanic gets busy. With the car jacked up and the brakes released he can turn the shaft from underneath to the most convenient position for doing the work.

When the roads are snow covered it is not necessary to use so much light. This offers an opportunity to save the battery for the greater work it has starting the motor in such weather.

How many drivers appreciate that the battery has extra work to do in starting a cold engine that has just been treated to a crankcase full of fresh oil?

The instruction books of some cars still recommend retarding the spark a little during cranking. Many drivers are under the impression that the spark of all cars today should be left fully advanced.

A car that cannot get through snow in a forward speed sometimes can get along in reverse, due to the lower gearing and greater power output from the engine.

New Auburn Values Seen as Outgrowth Of 5-Year Policy

In the announcement by Auburn of a 100-horsepower straight-eight automobile at $1195 and another 125-horsepower deluxe straight-eight model at $1495 is seen the culmination of a policy of putting back profits into the merchandise which has actuated the company for the last five years.

It is the belief of E. L. Cord, president of Auburn, that as the public's demand for a product widens, and earnings grow, the company owes an obligation to pass back the benefits of this success to the public in the form of continually better merchandise at less commensurate cost. This policy was put into effect by Auburn in 1925 and each year since then Auburn buyers have shared substantially in the growth of the company, it is said.

"Five years ago we adopted at Auburn the policy of returning to the public each year the fruits of our success in better built automobiles at less commensurate cost. The response to this policy has been unusually gratifying," Cord says.

"As sales of Auburn cars have increased expansion has been possible out of our earnings, resulting in lower overhead and production costs and finer automobiles for less cost.

"The values and prices of the 1930 Auburn cars have meen made possible by this circle of reciprocation. In 1929 Auburn broke all sales records and a new acceptance was achieved. It was our most successful year.

"1930 sees the passing on of this success to the public in the form of greater values at less cost, and, by giving the public this dividend, an increased demand for Auburn cars for 1930 is inevitable."

New Rubber Compound

Development and perfection of a new rubberized compound which will resist the penetration of X-rays and is suitable for lining of rooms in which X-ray apparatus is used, is announced by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. of Akron, O.

The new compound, identified as "Ray Rubber," is made in sheets similar to ordinary flooring material. It is approximately one-half inch in thickness and has a factor of repellance to X-rays equivalent to that of lead sheeting one-eighth inch thick.

More Stockholders

BARTLESVILLE, Ok., Jan. 11.—A 10 per cent increase in the number of stockholders of the Phillips Petroleum Corporation between the dividend period Sept. 14 to Dec. 14, 1929, was said by O. K. King, treasurer of the company, to indicate the growing public confidence in the oil industry.

THE NEW OAKLAND 8

General Motors' Lowest-Priced Eight . . . . the Car with Superior Performance

Today a new eight-cylinder motor car makes its appearance. It is the newest General Motors eight and by several hundreds of dollars the lowest in price. It is the most recent accomplishment of a staff of engineers with sixteen years' experience in designing fine eight-cylinder cars. It is the New Oakland Eight with smart new bodies by Fisher.

Superior Performance

The New Oakland Eight develops 85 horsepower and is the first stock car of its size and weight to employ an engine of such high power. Since performance depends largely on the ratio between horsepower and weight, the New Oakland Eight is exceptionally fast and powerful. Oakland produces one horsepower to 37 pounds of car weight. That's why few cars are as fast. That's why few, if any, can pass it on the hills. That's why it accelerates so rapidly in traffic. Truly it is a car with superior performance.

Eight-Cylinder Performance

Exceptional smoothness and flexibility are other prominent characteristics of the New Oakland Eight. It has all the smoothness which results from the overlapping power impulses inherent in eight-cylinder engine design. In addition, it enjoys exclusive mechanical advantages which make it even smoother and more delightful to drive.

Sound Basic Design

Because of their wide experience with eight-cylinder engines, the men who developed the New Oakland Eight were able to produce a car remarkably sound in its basic design. Several of the engineers who participated in creating General Motors' first eight back in 1914 were responsible for the development of the New Oakland Eight. To this latest task they brought a wide knowledge of eight-cylinder design. It is reasonable to expect that the Oakland is a finer eight because of this fact.

Moderate Price

We believe you are going to like the New Oakland Eight. We believe it will appeal to you all the more forcibly when you consider its very moderate price. You will find its many new features worthy of a thorough inspection. And a demonstration will reveal how well it merits the description, "the car with superior performance."

NEW SERIES PONTIAC BIG 6

A Famous Name—A Finer Car . . . Introducing Important Improvements

When an announcement regarding Pontiac is made, it carries a message of great importance to everyone interested in low-priced six-cylinder cars. This has been true from the very beginning of Pontiac's career. The announcement of the first Pontiac in 1926 brought to the low-price field a new order of beauty, performance and reliability. And each Pontiac announcement since that time has introduced a car which represented an improvement even over its own highly regarded predecessors.

Important Improvements

Now comes the New Series Pontiac Big Six—an even finer car with a famous name. It retains all those excellent qualities which have been responsible for Pontiac's success in the past. And in addition it introduces many refinements in smoothness of performance, in comfort and safety.

New bodies by Fisher make this latest Pontiac Big Six more beautiful than ever. A new belt moulding, which encircles the car, emphasizes its stream-line length and lowness. A choice of attractive new Duco colors is available at no extra cost.

Greater Smoothness and Safety

The smoothness of Pontiac's 60-horsepower engine is further increased by the use of improved type rubber engine mountings. Pontiac's large non-squeak four-wheel brakes have been made even more efficient. A new sloping non-glare windshield also adds to its safety. Greater-than-usual handling ease is accomplished through the use of a new type of steering mechanism. Improved Lovejoy Hydraulic Shock Absorbers bring about a notable increase in riding comfort.

Time-Tried Performance

In speed, power and pick-up the New Series Pontiac Big Six continues to uphold the Pontiac reputation for spirited performance. And Pontiac's economy and long life remain, as ever, the pride and satisfaction of everyone who drives the car.

When Pontiac is improved upon, the resulting car merits the careful consideration of everyone who is interested in a low-priced six. Come now to our showroom and inspect this finer car with a famous name—the New Series Pontiac Big Six.

The New Series Pontiac Big Six is available in seven body types. Shock absorbers standard equipment. Bumpers and spring covers at slight extra cost. General Motors Time Payment Plan available at minimum rate.

Consider the delivered price as well as the list (f. o. b.) price when comparing automobile values . . . Oakland-Pontiac delivered prices include only authorized charges for freight and delivery and the charge for any additional accessories or financing desired.

utive year, enjoyed the first position at the exhibit.

Following is a brief description of each of the cars, presented alphabetically with no differentiation between price classes:

AUBURN—This year Auburn offers three new lines, a six and two eights, at a considerable reduction in price. As has been told, these cars retain the characteristic and distinctive Auburn features, while incorporating many refinements. All three lines are equipped with Lycoming engines, Bijur chassis-lubrication system, hydraulic shock absorbers, internal expanding, four-wheel brakes, cam and lever steering, Brewster non-glare windshields on closed models, reinforced bodies and steel running-boards.

BUICK—The 1930 line of Buicks is offered in 15 models, embracing three different series, varying in horsepower, wheelbase length and price, with several new mechanical improvements. Bodies on all models are larger and have roofs three-quarters of an inch lower. A new four-passenger roadster was introduced at the show for the first time. An eight per cent increase of power has been built into the overhead valve engine of the new Buick by increasing the bore one-eighth inch. The bulge has been taken out of the body and the radiator shell is narrower.

New Cadillac.

CADILLAC—The first 16-cylinder engine to appear on the American market is introduced by Cadillac. It is said to achieve great comfort, safety and luxury, the V-type motor developing from 165 to 185 horsepower. The V-16 is in addition to the regular Cadillac and La Salle lines, which will continue to be built. It will be offered in 29 body styles, all custom-built by Fleetwood.

CHEVROLET—Described as the best yet, the new Chevrolet has 76 distinct improvements, designed to give greater comfort, better all-around performance and added power. Eight models, three introduced for the first time this year, comprise the line. Among the refinements are 50-horsepower motor, larger tires, smaller wheels, Delco-Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers at all four wheels, slanting, non-glare windshield and improved four-wheel braking system.

CHRYSLER—Chrysler came to the New York show with four distinct lines of cars, represented by 30 models, the largest range of cars ever offered by the company. The Imperial, "77," "70" and "66" were shown with a wide choice of colors. Multi-range four-speed transmission is a feature of the Imperial, "77" and "70" lines. The gearshift is standard, the "low" range being notched off for only occasional use when extreme power is required. The down-draft carburetor is found on the "77" and "70" cars. A specially designed fuel pump and a new manifold are used. In appearance, the Chrysler is smart as usual, with a panel molding extending the length of the sport models, several inches below the top of the doors.

CORD—It was the first year the Cord front wheel drive was shown at a national exhibit. Probably the most noticeable feature of this car is the closeness with which it hugs the ground. The front fenders likewise are the longest used on any production car, with an over-all length of more than 80 inches. They are of the one-piece type and their sweeping appearance adds much to the fleetness of lines. The body is streamlined throughout, a heavy molding extending from the cowl backward and tapering off to the radiator shell in front. Finish is in two-tone lacquer on most models and lamps, bumpers and tire carrier fittings are all in chrome.

De Soto "Eight."

DE SOTO.—A brand-new straight eight by De Soto was one of the features of the show. The present six will be continued, virtually unchanged, in its seven body styles. The new eight is now in production and will sell for approximately $1000. With the exception of the convertible coupe, all closed cars are equipped with slanting windshields, affording ventilation through a crank-operated mechanism. Both open types have folding windshields. The engine develops 72 horsepower, the suspension is insulated and lubrication is forcibly fed to the bearings. Down-draft carburetion is used. The transmission is of the three-speed, selective, sliding gear type, a unit with the engine. Mono-piece body construction has been borrowed from Dodge, another Chrysler product.

DU PONT.—This company presented seven different car types mounted on the model "G" chassis. Three of the models shown for the first time included a four-passenger Le Mans type speedster, sold with a guarantee to attain 100 miles an hour; a victoria cabriolet and a transformable berline. The DuPont is little seen in St. Louis, prices ranging above $10,000. The straight eight motor develops 140 horse-power. The cars retain the four-speed transmission. Little change was noted from the 1929 cars, the company having a policy of constant improvement, rather than yearly models.

DURANT.—An entirely new line of Durant cars was seen at the show. There were two chassis, one equipped with a three-speed transmission and the other with a larger engine and a four-speed, standard shift, transmission. The former car is built to sell in the lower-priced six-cylinder field and the latter in the $1000 price class. The new Durant bodies have accentuated horizontal lines, with sweeping, graceful curves and "spear-point" hood louvres. The sport phaeton, revolving on a dais, attracted considerable notice.

1930 Elcar Line.

ELCAR.—Elcar, in its "140" models, offers novelty in the use of an underslung worm gear drive. A shockless chassis and an eight-in-line motor are offered in each of the models. A decided innovation was the presentation of two lever-motored models. Briefly, the lever type motor offers the fundamental advantage of high piston speed and, consequently, a slow-speed motor. This means economy, flexibility and smooth action.

ERSKINE. — Studebakers "dynamic" new Erskine was given a complete showing. Seven body styles are offered, with wire wheel equipment standard on the regal sedan and regal landau. Mounted on a wheelbase of 114 inches, the new bodies are long, graceful and roomy, with extra wide doors.

FORD.—The new Fords were not shown in the regular exhibits at the Grand Central Palace, but were on display at the company's headquarters, Broadway and Fifty-fourth street. Body improvements feature the new line, no change having been made in the four-cylinder Model A engine and chassis of 103½-inch wheelbase. The new lines are enhanced by a deeper and narrower radiator, higher and longer hood and streamline moldings that sweep without a break to the rear.

FRANKLIN.—The new Franklin line is powered by the first air-cooled airplane type motor ever employed in an automobile, one which already has successfully flown a plane, and which develops 95 horsepower. The hood is set off by staggered horizontal louvres. Four-speed and three-speed transmissions are optional.

GARDNER.—Two eights and a six are offered, in addition to the front-drive six, the only front-drive car in the $2000 price class. Twenty-four body styles, open and closed, comprise the "140," "150" and "136" series, which have few major changes.

HUPMOBILE—A new eight was introduced by Hupmobile, the most powerful in its history. Its engine develops 133-horsepower and utilizes the double down-draft principle of carburetion. Radiator-cooled oil is used in the crankcase.

JORDAN—One of the most striking exhibits was that of Jordan, with the Speedway and Line 70 series, the latter including the new Sunshine sedan. The Speedway series is the largest, highest-priced and most luxurious ever produced by Jordan. The motor develops 125-horsepower and is said to deliver 100 miles per hour. In the Sportsman and the Ace, on a 145-inch wheelbase, the hood runs from radiator to windshield without a break. Fenders are individual and not attached to the running boards. The instrument board is of airplane design. In the roadster, entrance to the rumble seat is gained through the front compartment by means of a foldup seat back.

LA SALLE—This companion car to Cadillac is continued with various refinements and mechanical improvements. There are seven Fisher and six Fleetwood bodies mounted on the regular chassis.

LINCOLN—This year Lincoln exhibited a number of individual, family, sporting and formal cars at the show. The steering mechanism has been redesigned to enable the front wheels to be turned while the car is at a standstill, and to facilitate parking. Another improvement is a road shock dampener on the left front spring to prevent transmission of shocks to the frame of the car.

MARMON—Four lines of straight eights covering the major price ranges were introduced by Marmon, with the new big eight, a 125-horsepower car, and the little Roosevelt outstanding. In the big eight and the 8-79 an exclusive double-dome combustion chamber is used and is said to develop 10 per cent more power. The big eight is equipped with four-range transmission, aircraft type carburetor and many interior improvements.

MARQUETTE—There is little change in this companion car to the Buick, which was announced last summer. It is built on a 114-inch wheelbase and is offered in six models—the four-door sedan, two-door sedan, business coupe, roadster, phaeton and sport coupe.

NASH—A complete showing was made of the new Nash, including the twin-ignition eight, the twin-ignition six and the single six. Many advances in engineering practice are embodied in the different series.

OAKLAND—One of the features of the show was the V-type eight Oakland, with greater power, speed and acceleration than in the previous six. The Oakland eight is described elsewhere in this section.

OLDSMOBILE—A complete description of the 1930 Oldsmobile is printed elsewhere in this section.

PACKARD—As has ben told, the new Packard features the four-range transmission and is presented in three major lines—the standard, custom and deluxe straight eights. In each line there are 11 different body models on four different wheelbases.

PIERCE-ARROW — A full description of the Pierce-Arrow line for 1930, including the new, smaller eight, appears elsewhere in this section.

PLYMOUTH — Little change marks the new edition of the Chrysler-built Plymouth, the only four-cylinder product of this company. Refinements include a longer engine stroke, heavier crankshaft, smaller and sturdier wheels, heavier frame and redesigned springs.

PONTIAC — The new series Pontiac six is described elsewhere in this section.

RUXTON—It was also the first time this front drive car has been shown at a national exhibit. The Ruxton was displayed by the Moon Motor Car Co., of St. Louis, which recently acquired all manufacturing rights. A stock roadster, done in two shades of green after a color motif by Josef Urban, and a standard five-passenger sedan constructed the Ruxton display.

STUDEBAKER — The Studebaker display featured the "dynamic" new Erskine six and the big President eight, state victoria, although all lines were shown.

STUTZ-BLACKHAWK —Custom body designs mounted on standard Stutz and Blackhawk chassis distinguished this year's display of these cars. The line comprises 46 body styles on chassis of 127½, 134½ and 145-inch wheelbases.

VIKING—Introduced last spring, the Viking now has smoother lines and a more streamlined appearance. It is built by the Olds Motor Works. This year a sedan with deluxe upholstery.

WHIPPET — This lowest-priced of all Willys-Overland products retains the four-cylinder engine and is prdouced in a variety of body types. They have narrower radiators, sweeping lines and an artistic body design. Colors are in harmony with interior decorations and upholstery.

WILLYS—This new six is capable of developing 65 horsepower and producing a speed of 73 miles an hour. Features are a rubber-insulated, vibrationless engine said to have the highest compression of any engine in its class, double-acting shock absorbers and internal four-wheel brakes.

WILLYS-KNIGHT — Two complete lines of Knight-engined sixes round out the Willys-Overland lines for 1930. These are the Willys-Knight great six and the Willys-Knight 70-B, the latter in a lower price field. The sleeve-valve engine of the great six has been increased to 87 horsepower. Both are equipped with "finger-tip control."

WINDSOR—Another St. Louis product, the Windsor 6-75 and 8-85 are announced by the Moon Motor Car Co. as companion cars to the White Prince 8-92 and the lower priced 6-69 lines for 1930.

rst Showing of Pierce-Arrow's 1930 Models Here

w Small "Eight" Presented; Silent Transmission A Feature.

ierce-Arrow's new array of ight eights, introduced last k at the New York Automo Show, was placed on exhibit terday at the showrooms of the stern Automobile Co., 4824 shington boulevard, St. Louis ributer.

"There are three groups of rce-Arrow cars this year, in d of two, as formerly," said n Breadon, president of the lo company. "They include a new slightly smaller model of some at lower price.

A more powerful motor and et, clashless gearshift are ong the mechanical improve nts. I believe our new cars e the fastest acceleration of any America today."

The first of Pierce-Arrow's new oups comprises its most luxuri s models, largely of chauffeur ven design. These are mounted a chassis of 144-inch wheelbase, ghtly larger than its predecessor, d introduce the most powerful of Pierce-Arrow engines — 132 rsepower by actual test. Five odels—town car, a seven-pas nger enclosed drive limousine, an usually commodious seven-pas nger sedan, a convertible coupe d a big seven-passenger touring r—comprise Group A, whose ices at the factory range from 975 to $6250.

In group B, powered by a 125- rsepower engine, are offered a ve-passenger sedan, a club sedan, chauffeur-driven club berline, a five-passenger victoria coupe, a ven-passenger sedan and a seven- ssenger enclosed drive limousine, l mounted on a 139-inch wheel se chassis; on a 134-inch chassis e offered a roadster, a smart ur-passenger phaeton with ton au cowl and windshield, a four- ssenger touring car and a con ertible coupe. Prices range from 2975 to $3675 at the factory.

In group C, whose wheelbase is 32-inches, Pierce-Arrow has cre ted a five-passenger sedan of lib ral proportions. Its companion rs of this group are a five-pas nger club brougham and a two- ssenger coupe with rumble seat. he engine has an unusually high utput—115 horsepower. Prices at he factory range from $2595 to 2750.

Notable among the cars of new imensions are the seven-passenger edans and enclosed drive limou ines on the 139-inch wheelbase. his great chassis length enabled he designers to create rear com artments of proportions so large hat the two forward seats afford ull-measure comfort and offer no nconvenience to occupants of the ear lounge.

"Body by Pierce-Arrow" again identifies each of the various models as the product of Pierce-Arrow's body shops which have been devoted to the building of distinguished coachwork since the early days of the industry.

The interiors present an entirely fresh expression of Pierce-Arrow artistry. Fabrics of new weaves, textures and colorings have been tailored in the fashions of 1930 mode. The forward seats in the tonneau of the larger cars now disappear completely from view when folded. Genuine walnut mouldings with hand-carved effects frame the windows. Smoking sets of exquisite design, glove pockets, new sling-type toggle straps (in the larger cars), ozite-padded carpets, center arm rests, telescoping adjustable drivers seat, and handsome new instrument panelings are among the new elements of beauty.

The straight eight engines for each of the three groups mechanically represent an advance over the power plants whose performance has distinguished Pierce-Arrow for the past year. Because of their tremendous excess of power, they yield almost incredible rates of acceleration. Their nine-bearing, balanced crankshafts, mounted in diamond-bored bearings, contribute to smooth, silent operation.

In the new silent, clashless transmission, Pierce-Arrow has made one of the greatest engineering strides of recent years. With it the most inexperienced of drivers can shift gears without clashing, regardless of engine speed, and by the merest wrist motion. Because of a silent intermediate, the result of constant-mesh herringbone or V-shaped gears, extremely rapid accelerations up to 55 or 60 miles an hour are accomplished without noise, vibration or hum, before slipping into high gear, it is said.

Acton Tire Co. Made Sampson Distributer Here

The Samson Tire and Rubber Co. of Los Angeles, Cal., announces through J. H. Appleby, manager of the Kansas City, Mo., branch, the selection of the Wallace E. Acton Tire Co., 3032 Olive street, as the St. Louis distributer of Samson tires.

W. E. Acton.

The Samson company, of which A. Schleicher is president, started in a small way several years ago, with the manufacture of 25 tires a day.

Recently the company opened its new $8,000,000 building which is its third plant, and which will increase production to more than 6000 tires daily.

Samson had the advantage in starting at about the time that automobile stage lines came into existence, and being where stage lines originated, got full benefit of the grueling experience of developing this line of tires. As a result, Samson was the first to perfect a successful stage tire, and has used this knowledge in developing a high quality passenger car and truck tire as well.

Officers of the Acton company are: Wallace Acton, president; George Acton, vice president; George D. Clipner, secretary-treasurer, and Dr. George A. Clipner, assistant secretary-treasurer.

Acton has had a wide experience in the tire business in the last 14 years.

G. W. Houk Named Salesmanager of Lurie Motor Co.

Announcement of the appointment of George W. Houk as retail sales manager of the Lurie St. Louis Studebaker and Erskine distributer is made by Sam Lurie, vice president and general manager.

G. W. Houk.

Houk has been with the local Studebaker organization since 1923. For the first five years of this period he was a salesman for the old Weber Motor Car Co., former Studebaker distributer. He has since achieved an excellent record as salesman for the Lurie company, having led that company's organization in sales in the last two years.

Last September, in the absence of Lurie from the city, Houk acted as sales manager. A native of St. Louis, he was in the retail piano business for 12 years before entering the automobile business.

Schuster Joins Sales Staff of Body Company

Ted J. Schuster, who has had considerable experience in the automobile body building business in St. Louis, has been added to the sales staff of the Herman Body Co., it is announced. The company recently added 26,000 square feet of floor space to its St. Louis plant, in line with an expansion program.

T. J. Schuster.

Schuster, when a boy, helped his father, who was one of the pioneer body builders of the city. He has been connected with the McCabe-Powers Body Co., the Anheuser-Busch body department and was at one time foreman of the Martin-Perry Co.

The Herman Body Co. operates plants in St. Louis and Decatur, Ill. The company was a pioneer in the electrically welded, all-steel, underframe type of construction.

Front-Drive 'Six' Displayed at New York by Gardner

Will Be Produced in April and Offered in $2000 Price Class.

The third of the front wheel drive passenger cars to be built in America—the new Gardner six—made its appearance at the New York show last week. Mounted on a 133-inch wheelbase, it sells in the $2000 price class. It is an addition to the regular Gardner line of sixes and eights.

Gardner collaborated with engineers of the Baker Reulang Body Works in fashioning the body design, which is unique. All of the major operating units are located forward of the dash in the chassis and are easily accessible. The engine, transmission, clutch, differential and the two drive shafts are really a single unit. The power plant is of the L-head detachable type, with a rated horsepower of 27.3, developing 80-horsepower at 3000 revolutions per minute.

The core of the radiator is located back of a grill, which is curved in front, similar to French designs.

The new car will be produced, beginning next April, in the following body styles: Roadster, coupe, phaeton, brougham and Deauville coupe.

St. Louis Woman On Third Day Of Florida Tour

saw, then called Big Shanty, that the historic chase of the "General began, and a monument is there marking the place.

As I have said, we did not loiter in Atlanta. There never seems to be any place downtown on Peachtree street to idle. Near Atlanta is Stone Mountain, that great granite dome where the huge Confederate Memorial is being carved. You should stop off and drive out to see it, though if you want to wait until spring when you return there is no doubt about it lasting through the winter. It is said to be the largest mass of granite in the world.

Heavy Coats Welcome.

We have caught up with mild weather, and from here on heavy coats will be welcome only early in the mornings. You may prefer to ship a trunk to your destination in Florida and carry no more baggage with you than necessary on the trip. At the overnight stops in Florida before you reach Miami or Palm Beach, or wherever you are going, you probably will feel more inclined to dress up than at these intermediate places, because all of Florida has something of the resort air. Any of the coast resorts will offer you unlimited opportunity to wear in January what St. Louis, New York, Chicago, likewise Big Rapids and Cheyenne Wells, will wear next July. But you know that an extensive wardrobe is not absolutely essential for the enjoyment of Florida, and I'll bet there will be a lot of women down there this winter who will have as much fun with $75 on their backs and a few hundred in their stockings as they had last year in the most expensive models.

This is Saturday, and if you were in Griffin, Ga., tonight, where we are, and walked down the busy main street, almost the only white persons you would see would be policemen—big "Cracker" boys, as casual as cumulus clouds—but the rest of the sidewalk traffic would step off the curbstone and into the gutter if necessary, to give you room.

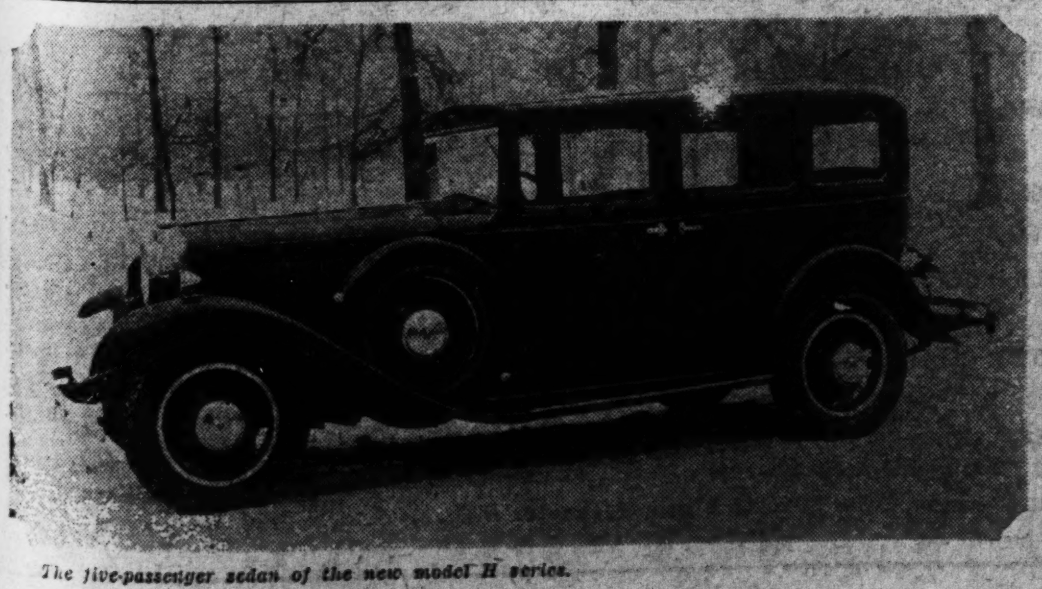
So far we have allowed only one stopover to a state, and that means North Florida tomorrow night, but we are not on schedule, remember, we are just drifting through Dixie, and outside of Atlanta there does not seem to be any hurry in Georgia. My only promise is to write each day we are on the way, and if these letters have brought any realization of the pleasure and the perfect ease of women touring to Florida, then I am content.

Lycoming Expands

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., Jan. 11.—An expansion program that involves the investment of nearly $1,500,000 will be completed early in 1930 by the Lycoming Manufacturing Co., W. H. Beal, vice president, has announced.

The program, which was started in 1929, is well under way, and upon its completion production facilities of the company will have been increased fully 50 per cent.

The 1930 133-Horsepower Hupmobile 'Eight'



The five-passenger sedan of the new model H series.

New Aerocar Trailer Makes Its Appearance Here

Exhibited in conjunction with the shoe men's convention, this vehicle, owned by the Enna Jettick Co., is a traveling sample room, stocked with the latest in shoes. It is attached to a Willys-Knight great six coupe, and was designed by Glenn Curtis, noted airplane builder.

New "Eight" Climbs Steep Inclines in High at Pittsburg

The new Oakland eight, distinguished for its hill climbing ability, recently added new deeds to its ascension records by leveling out Pittsburg's steepest grades.

Stopping at the foot of Tokio Hill, a grade of approximately 16 per cent, the Oakland lunged at the hill. A standing start in low, a short run in second, then into high. All the way up hill the car gained speed, and near the top the driver had to slow down to make an abrupt turn, clearing the top at better than 30 miles an hour.

South Negley Hill was next. Like Tokio, it is a well known grade. But the car, with its powerful 85-horsepower engine, purred up in high gear without a murmur.

Carriers Get Noisy.

That mysterious rattle from the back of the car may be the tire carrier. The noise it makes frequently is transmitted along the frame in such a fashion that it is hard to locate.

AND SILENT GEAR-SHIFT
are among recent notable Pierce-Arrow developments. Gears can be shifted quietly, almost effortlessly, at any speed.

IN extending its Straight Eight line to meet every latest demand of the fine car market, Pierce-Arrow opens the 1930 season with an array of motor cars which again easily qualify as America's finest.

There are four new wheelbases in the 1930 group . . all cars of increased inner spaciousness . . all slender, low-swung, graceful creations in the finest Pierce-Arrow tradition.

The slightly smaller car in the new line . . of an inch less wheelbase . . is of true Pierce-Arrow quality throughout. Its low price ($2595 at Buffalo) gives it extraordinary value.

THE 1930 colorings and upholsterings and appointments are new elements of beauty, freshly expressed.

There are new door latches, velvet of operation . . new clocks and vanity cases in the ultra-modern manner . . new footrests and lights and mirrors which reflect the mode of the hour.

More important, there are engineering developments of vital consideration . . all present in every car of the 1930 line.

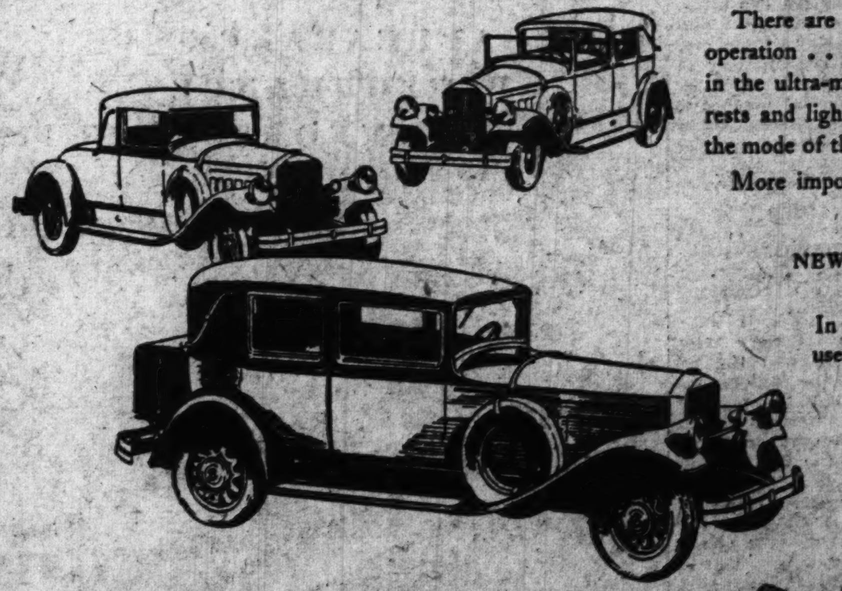
MECHANICALLY, as well as modishly, Pierce-Arrow keeps abreast of the hour. Its improvements are never saved for an occasion, never sensationalized . . although it has pioneered some of the greatest.

So it is that today's Straight Eight line by Pierce-Arrow is possessed of every feature worthy of adoption by America's finest motor car. For example:

Silent gear-shifts . . non-shatterable glass . . super-safety brakes . . low-swung gravity centers . . hydraulic shock absorbers, etc., etc. All Pierce-Arrow features . . each having been added as it proved itself . . and without particular mention or especial acclaim.

Nor is there any excess of modesty in this attitude. It is simply that no new feature, or any group of new features, could conceivably be so important as that which is Pierce-Arrow. Greater is that than the sum of all its parts.



NEW PIERCE-ARROW PRICES . . at Buffalo . . From $2595 to $6250
(Other Custom-built Models up to $10,000)

In the purchase of a car from income, the average allowance on a good used car usually more than covers the initial Pierce-Arrow payment.

THREE NEW GROUPS OF STRAIGHT EIGHTS

Group A: 132 Horsepower . . 144-inch Wheelbase . . . . . . $3975 to $6250
Group B: 125 Horsepower . . 134 and 139-inch Wheelbase . . $2975 to $3675
Group C: 115 Horsepower . . 132-inch Wheelbase . . . . . . $2595 to $2750

Oakland Brings Out V-Type '8' In Medium Field

New Series Pontiac Six Also Shown to Public First Time This Week.

Recent rumors of new developments in the Oakland-Pontiac line for 1930 found ample basis yesterday with the first display of the latest products of Oakland Motor Car Co. in St. Louis.

While retaining its position in the six-cylinder field with the new series Pontiac big six, which represents many mechanical refinements, the company now has entered the eight-cylinder field with a moderate-priced type Oakland that offers greater power, speed and acceleration. The new Oakland is the only motor car in its price field powered with a "V" engine.

Without torsional vibration at any engine speed, the new power plant develops 85 horsepower at 3000 revolutions per minute, from a displacement of 251 cubic inches. This remarkable output of power is due to several new factors, including the complete down-draft type of carburetion, the new type of high-compression two-plane cylinder heads and the horizontal valve design. These features and many others permit the development of power with a gasoline economy approximately the same as that of the previous Oakland six which was rated at 68 brake horsepower. The comparatively short design of the "V" engine which in the new Oakland is only 25 9-16 inches long, has enabled the Oakland engineers to retain the 117-inch wheelbase of the Oakland six while allowing even more passenger room. The new Oakland's power in a chassis of moderate weight gives a ratio of one horsepower to each 37 pounds of car weight—the secret of the high speed, fast acceleration and flexibility of which the new car is capable.

New Type of Engine.

Oakland has developed a new type of engine mounting for the eight. The two forward engine mountings are designed in the form of flat laminated springs. While rear rubber mountings restrain the engine from motion relative to the car frame, these front spring type mountings serve to absorb the normal reactions of engine operation. In order to prevent the spring type mountings from permitting the engine to respond to roadshocks a new device — the "synchronizer" was invented. It provides a lateral tie rod, solidly bolted to the right side of the frame and extending through an opening into the crankcase.

Synchronized with the normal engine relations, this simple device permits the springs on which the front of the engine is mounted to absorb these microscopic reactions but, through its anchorage on the car frame, prevents outside shocks from communicating extreme motion to the engine. This revolutionary engine mounting, in conjunction with the rubber cushion drive connecting the power plant and the propeller shaft, develops a high degree of engine smoothness.

The thermostatically controlled cooling system of the new "V" eight provides a new "recirculation" feature which contributes importantly toward better performance and higher efficiency. In other types of cooling the water becomes stagnant in the cylinder block and head when the thermostat valve is closed, permitting water in some of the engine passages to remain cool while steam is being formed in other spots. This condition causes uneven expansion and inefficient operation during the warming up period. In the new Oakland a small by-pass connects the water pump with the cylinder head outlet manifold, thus allowing water, trapped in the engine by the closed thermostat valve, to keep circulating within the engine.

New Developments.

Many other late developments also are to be found on both the Oakland and Pontiac. One of these is the safety device by which danger of operating without lubrication is obviated in the remote event that the oil pump should fail to function. In such an emergency the shearing of a small pin would stop the distributor and halt the engine, preventing possible damage from lack of oil.

Both also employ a new type of semi-automatic starting motor. In this new design, the starting motor pinion engages the teeth of the flywheel at the first downward movement of the starter pedal, electrical contact and rotation of the starter armature being accomplished only after the starter pinion is in mesh with the flywheel. This eliminates chipping of the teeth on the flywheel gear.

Oakland's contribution to driver convenience, the toe button control of tilt-ray headlamps, is retained in both the Oakland and Pontiac for 1930. In the Oakland a new lighting innovation is represented by the indicator lamps, mounted on the two front fenders. They not only add a smart touch to the appearance of the car, but are said to provide features of safety and utility as well. Spreading light both ahead and to each side, these lamps serve the same purpose as do the port and starboard lights of a ship by appraising drivers of cars approaching in cross traffic of the presence of the Oakland.

An important comfort feature on both cars is found in the rubber cups which seal the brake and clutch pedal openings when the pedals are in normal position, thus preventing summer heat or winter cold from entering the cars. The dash panels are heavily insulated against temperature extremes.

'Silent-Second' Transmission Is Reo's Offering

Models 25 and 20 Placed on View at Show in New York.

One of the most interesting mechanical developments of the year, the Reo silent-second transmission that promises to revolutionize driving in heavy traffic and on hills, was introduced as standard equipment on the Reo Flying Clouds, models 20 and 25, displayed for the first time at the automobile show in New York.

The new herringbone gear transmission recently invented by Reo engineers, and an exclusive feature on Reo cars and one other American car in a much higher price class, eliminates practically all noise of second gear driving and permits easy shifting from second to high and vice versa while the car is being operated up to 40 miles an hour, according to Richard H. Scott, Reo president.

Reo cars for 1930 are available in three distinctive series, the announcement states: The Flying Cloud model 25, with a 124-inch wheel base. The Flying Cloud model 20 with 120-inch wheel base and the Reo model 15 on a 115-inch wheel base. Numbers 25 and 20 are equipped with the new transmission, in addition to the standard "Lo-Ex" aluminum alloy pistons and chrome nickel cylinder blocks. Six body styles are being presented. Prices of the three series range from $1195 to $1945.

All are equipped with six-cylinder motors, the two larger ones having a 3⅜x5 bore and an S. A. E. rating of 27.3 horsepower, actually developing 80 horsepower. The smaller model has a 3⅜x4 bore and 27.3 horsepower S. A. E. rating, with an actual horsepower of 60.

Outside of the new transmission, which is strictly a mechanical improvement over any other type of transmission in existence, the new Reos are not materially different than they have been in the past. Naturally the latest body designs available are being incorporated, as are a large number of minor improvements. But the essential qualities are being continued in accordance with a long established policy of providing the best in quality and workmanship year after year with no fundamental changes that do not prove absolutely necessary to ultimate performance and efficiency.

Graham Production Shows Big Gains

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 11. — Increased production, with notable gains in shipments to Canada and to overseas countries, and a large expansion in dealer representation, is reported by the Graham-Paige Motors Corporation in a summary of its 1929 progress.

Production in December showed a considerable gain over the same month last year, despite extensive plant reorganization in preparation for the introduction of two new Graham eights.

The total production for 1929 was 77,089, as compared with 73,195 for 1928. Shipments to dealers total 76,622.

Increasing Output.

A total of 4,828,720 motor vehicles were produced in the first nine months of this year in the United States, as compared with 4,601,130 manufactured during the whole of 1928.

Howard Named Advertising Head Of G. M. Truck Co.

PONTIAC, Mich., Jan. 11.—Announcement is made of the appointment of John M Howard as assistant sales manager of the General Motors Truck Co, in charge of sales extension. The latter constitutes an important part of the company's aggressive and widespread expansion program for 1930. Before his appointment to his new post Howard served as advertising manager of the organization. He has had 15 years of experience in the automotive industry, cars and trucks, in both advertising and sales capacities.

J. M. Howard.

Appointment of Henry T. DeHart as the new manager of advertising and sales promotion for the General Motors Truck Co. also is announced. He likewise has a long record in automotive advertising and merchandising. Prior to coming to the organization in March, 1929, he was for eight years advertising and sales promotion manager of the Reo Motor Car Co. for both the passenger car and truck divisions.

White Sidewall Tire Introduced In Sport Models

AKRON, O., Jan. 11.—With a greater variety of colors and color combinations than ever before in the automobile field, tire manufacturers have recognized a trend away from the prosaic black that has long been the conventional color for tires. Since the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co. introduced the black tire tread, that color has been most popular, probably because black seems to be the most serviceable and shows the least the results of road hardships.

While the white sidewall tire is not new in the tire field, it virtually amounts to an innovation in balloon tires. Goodrich has introduced it into its de luxe line and it has become popular among motorists who are discriminating in variety and quality. It finds its greatest favor in sport models of the larger cars and adds materially to the appearance of this class of cars.

Accessory Group And "Boosters" Hold Meeting

The Automotive Accessory Association of St. Louis and the St. Louis chapter of the Automotive Boosters gave a buffet dance for members at the American Annex Hotel, Jan. 4. One hundred and fifty members of the two organizations attended.

Brief addresses were made by Fred Campbell of the Fred Campbell Auto Supply Co., Carl Christiansen, newly elected president of the Boosters; John F. Shuford, past international chairman of the Boosters, and Maj. Robert E. Lee of the St. Louis Automobile Dealers' Association.

High Tax for Trucks.

While the average tax on passenger automobiles in the United States is $22 a year, the average tax on trucks is more than $50.

Chevrolet Price Reduction Creates Furore in Detroit

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 11.—Announcement last week of substantially reduced prices of the 1930 Chevrolet Six, at the same time that the car embodying many distinct improvements made its public bow, created a sensation in automotive circles here.

Reductions as announced by W. S. Knudsen, president and general manager, range from $25 to $50 on seven of the 12 models in the 1930 line, while three new body types introduced for the first time this year are priced to parallel the new low figure on models retained in the current series. The present base price of $495 brings the six-cylinder Chevrolet to within $5 of the lowest price at which even the four-cylinder Chevrolet was ever sold.

This is made possible, Knudsen explained, because 1929 was Chevrolet's greatest year, with an output of 1,350,000 sixes. Economies of precision manufacturing, plus savings effected by quantity purchase of raw materials, brought about lowered production costs, which, consistent with the Chevrolet policy, are now being passed on to the consuming public.

The new range is from $365 for the light delivery chassis to $675 for the sedan, as against 1929 prices of $400 for the light delivery chassis to $725 for the convertible landau. All prices are f. o. b. the factory, at Flint, Mich.

A SMOOTHER, FASTER, BETTER SIX

At St. Louis Airfields

AIR travel at 5 cents a mile is meeting with popular approval, records of Southwest Air Fast Express since Jan. 1 plainly indicate.

With the establishment of the 5-cent rate by S. A. F. E. its planes have carried capacity loads almost daily and last Saturday and Sunday it was necessary to use two four-place Lockheed-Vega ships in addtiion to the regular tri-motored transport to take care of the travel from the Southwest to St. Louis. Twenty-one passengers were carried to St. Louis Saturday and 20 on Sunday from Dallas, Tex., and intermediate points.

The large Sunday business appears to indicate that a number of persons are taking advantage of the reasonable fare to take week-end excursions by air. The increase in air travel was temporarily halted by inclement weather during the week, but S. A. F. E. officials are planning to add to the company's equipment in the event the heavy travel continues when the weather improves. With this in view, L. G. Fritz, operations manager for the airline, made a trip to Detroit, Mich., during the week to confer with Ford Co. officials.

In justice to other airline operators, who have not reduced fares, it should be stated that the 5-cent rate is a losing proposition to the operator. Experts agree generally that it costs $100 an hour to operate a tri-motored plane having a capacity of 14 passengers. However, Erle Halliburton of the S. A. F. E. Co., has announced his intention of spending a large amount to educate the public to air travel.

Moth Plane to Be Made Here.

The Gipsy Moth, two-place training and sport plane developed in England and manufactured under American rights at Lowell, Mass., will be made by the Curtiss-Robertson Airplane Manufacturing Co., at Lambert-St. Louis Field, it is announced.

The Curtiss-Robertson Co. and the Moth Aircraft Corporation are subsidiaries of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation, and the consolidation of the two concerns is to eliminate duplication in manufacturing. It will not be necessary to increase the size of the Curtiss-Robertson plant, which has a capacity of 38 planes a week. Machinery from the Lowell plant is being shipped here and the Moth will be manufactured as another model of the local plant. Minton N. Warren, president of the Moth Co., will come here as vice president and production manager of the Curtiss-Robertson Co. The personnel of the Curtiss-Robertson plant, which numbered 600 persons during the rush period last summer, will be increased to 1000 when the plant is in full production, Maj. Robertson announces.

A feature of the Moth is the slotted wing attachment, designed to prevent spins. The plane, developed by the De Haviland Co., aroused general comment following Lady Mary Heath's flight from Africa to England in a Moth. The Prince of Wales learned to fly in a Moth, as did Mrs. Lindbergh. The Moth is powered with the Gipsy engine, made locally by the Wright Aeronautical Corporation, in a factory at McKissock and Adelaide avenues. The Moth sells at $4980 without the slotted wing device.

Woman Takes Flying Course.

Miss Grace Bunberry, a Western Union operator, has enrolled for a flying course in the Curtiss-Wright School and will take instruction at Curtiss-Steinberg Airport this spring. She has completed the ground instruction.

Von Hoffmann Class.

Eight new students started instruction at the Von Hoffmann Flying School last Tuesday. A prospective student of the school is now on his way to the United States from Morocco. He is a descendent of Alphonse Daudet, French author, and is a veteran of the French army.

Flies 194 Miles an Hour.

Earl Fleet, T. A. T. pilot flying between St. Louis and Waynoka, Ok., opened the throttle of a Ford transport last Sunday and made the 117-mile trip from Waynoka to Wichita, Kan., in 34 minutes, an average of 194 miles an hour. A tail wind helped the ship along.

Capt. Wimer in Washington.

Capt. William B. Wimer, operations officer for the Thirty-fifth Division Air Service, is in Washington looking up data at the Department of Aeronautics. Capt. Wimer is an instructor in the Curtiss-Wright Flying School.

Bank Sends Cash by Plane.

Bobby Jewell, Universal pilot, made a trip to Paducah, Ky., Tuesday with a shipment of cash from the First National Bank of St. Louis to the First National Bank of Paducah.

To Exchange Passengers.

Effective next Wednesday Southwest Air Fast Express and the Wabash Railroad will exchange passengers. Under the arrangement, passengers leaving Detroit, Toledo, Fort Wayne and Chicago at night will transfer to a plane here the following morning for a day flight to Dallas, Tex., or intermediate points.

Parks in Full Charge.

With the resignation of Harry Mammen as president of Parks Air College, Oliver L. Parks is now in complete charge of the flying school as vice president and general manager. He announces that no changes in personnel are planned.

Seventeen students made up the first class of 1930 in airplane and engine mechanics at the Parks institution. A new class in these subjects is started weekly. An additional week has been added to the ground course for student pilots, it was announced. The course now totals 180 hours of instruction, covering 10 weeks. An employment department designed to provide students with jobs to pay a part of their instruction expenses has been started at the school.

Oil Drillers Buy a Wasp-Ryan.

The Cree & Hoover Co., oil drilling contractors of Amarillo, Tex., has purchased a Wasp-Ryan for use of company executives. The plane was painted to order, the wing being gold, fuselage maroon, and trimmings black.

Ski Plane Used in Sleet Storm.

The first plane fitted with skis was flown at Lambert-St. Louis Field following the sleet storm last week. The ship is a Challenger-Robin and was taken up by Maj. Robertson, Joe Reed, Gentry Shelton and Frank Kern, none of whom had previously flown a plane on which runners replaced the regulation wheels.

Basketball Team Flies.

Cortes Jennings of Hollywood, Cal., former member of the Princeton University basketball team, is a guard on the Universal Flying School team. The aviators flew to Macomb, Ill., Tuesday in a tri-motored ship for a game with the Macomb Teachers' College, and were caught in the sleet storm during the return flight next day. A crowd of 200 persons saw the game.

4346 Passengers Via T. A. T.

Records for the first six months of T. A. T. operation show that planes of the company flew a total of 545,354 miles, carrying 4346 passengers. Seventy-one per cent of the trips were made on schedule.

Preparing for Exposition.

Cliff W. Henderson, general manager of the International Aircraft Exposition, to be held at The Arena Feb. 15 to 23, returned from New York last week with signed contracts from several exhibitors. The Curtiss-Wright Corporation will have 12 ships on display, and American Eagle will be represented by five ships, Henderson said.

Boys' Glider Club Formed.

The St. Louis Glider & Model Association, made up of school boys interested in flying, was organized Thursday night at the headquarters of Curtiss-Wright Flying Service. About 40 boys attended and heard addresses by Maj. Robertson and James Tulley, manager of Curtiss-Steinberg Airport.

Enrolled at Universal.

Three new students, Frank Yampolsky and George Thompson of St. Louis, and James Rae, Auburn, Ill., enrolled for flying courses at the Universal Flying School last week.

To Demonstrate the Cardinal.

John McMilian, test pilot for the St. Louis Aircraft Corporation, will depart tomorrow in a Cardinal monoplane for Miami, Fla. He will make a three weeks' demonstration tour of the South.

A Cardinal plane was delivered to a purchaser at Little Rock, Ark., last week, and a second plane was taken by Aero Agents, Inc., of Chicago, Cardinal distributer.

Phil Ball's Flying Field.

Phil Ball, flying baseball magnate, is reported to be planning a 180-acre flying field at Battle Lake, Fergus Falls, Minn., where he has a summer home.

To Show Ryan Brougham.

"Red" Harrigan, demonstration pilot for the Ryan Aircraft Corporation, will leave this week for New York to demonstrate a Ryan brougham to several Long Island prospects.

Flying in Sleet.

Ray W. Brown, sales manager for the Parks organization, had an unpleasant experience flying through sleet Wednesday from Kansas City to Parks Airport. Brown was forced to land twice on the way and at Booneville had to use a hatchet to chop away the ice, which so weighted down his ship as to cause erratic flying.

E. P. Halliburton to Speak.

Erle P. Halliburton, president of Southwest Air Express, will address a meeting of the St. Louis Traffic Club this week.

To Join Rickenbacker.

Eugene Diesing, a graduate of Missouri University, has completed his flying course at the Von Hoffmann School and will go to New York, where he will be associated with Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, World War ace, who is now engaged in commercial aviation.

Exhibition Space For Aviation Show Almost Exhausted

With the receipt of reservations from practically all of the leading manufacturers and aircraft groups in this country for space at the International Aircraft Exposition scheduled for Feb. 15 to 23, and sponsored by the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America, C. W. Henderson, manager of the show, announces that very little exhibition area remains unspoken for. Official allotment of space by the National Show Committee of the Aeronautical Chamber will be announced next week, he said.

Exhibitors will occupy more than 300 booths in the two wings of The Arena, and will display the most complete line of aircraft motors, accessories, etc., ever seen in this country. Approximately 100 planes will be placed in the center sections of the buildings and will constitute one of the most brilliant presentations ever attempted by the aircraft industry.

Quaker State Co. Purchases Plant In Pennsylvania

The Quaker State Oil Refining Co. of Oil City, Pa., through Sam Rotenberg, president of Consolidated Petroleum Products, Inc., 4375 Duncan street, St. Louis, distributer of Quaker State motor oils and greases, announces the purchase of the McKean County Refining Co., Farmers Valley, Pa., in the heart of the Bradford oil fields.

The McKean plant was erected in 1923 and has been operating continuously on selected Pennsylvania grade crude oil which it obtains from producers in the Bradford field through its own lines.

Steady growth of the Quaker States' oil business has led to a policy of expansion and plant improvements. During the last year additions costing millions of dollars have been made to the plants of the Emlenton Refining Co., Emlenton, Pa.; the Independent Refining Co., Oil City, Pa., and the Ohio Valley Refining Co., St. Mary's, W. Va., all owned by Quaker State, according to Rotenberg.

Traffic Sleuths.

One hundred citizen motorists of Youngstown, O., have been appointed to report violations of traffic laws to police. This is the first step in a campaign to try to check traffic accidents in the city. Offending motorists who are reported to police will be warned for the first offense, and arrested if reported a second time. The names of the 100 "citizen cops" will be kept secret.

Hard Will Tell Of Naval Parley Over NBC Chains

Will Have Use of Facilities of British Broadcasting Monopoly.

The British Broadcasting Corporation, official broadcasting organization of Great Britain, has approved the National Broadcasting Co. plans to have William Hard, American newspaper correspondent and broadcaster, tell to America the story of the five-power-naval-parley in London through the facilities of the British corporation.

Preceding the speech of King George V opening the conference on Jan. 21, Hard will introduce the subject to the American radio audience over NBC networks, his voice coming from England by short wave transmission.

Hard sailed with the American delegates, carrying official notice that he would be persona grata as representative of American radio and liaison offices between the British Broadcasting Corporation and NBC.

"Selection of a representative of American radio at the parley was almost an official diplomatic exchange," said M. H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcast Co. today. "We submitted the name of Mr. Hard to the British Broadcasting Corporation some time since, together with his credentials as an observer and writer of known accuracy and reliability. We are very happy that after due consideration he has been approved.

"Mr. Hard is widely known in London, having spent 10 years in the British capital. His knowledge of international affairs and his acquaintance with representatives of foreign Powers assures this country able representation from the radio standpoint. It is proposed that Mr. Hard send daily observations to this country by short waves for rebroadcasting over our nation-wide networks, during at least the first two weeks of the conference. Arrangements are also being made to supplement these broadcasts with addresses by distinguished British and American statesmen, and by the talks of the official British commentator."

KWK Fights Power Increase for WCDA

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 11.—The service of KWK would be seriously impaired if the Radio Commission granted an application for a power increase for WCDA, New York, according to an affidavit by Thomas P. Convey, presented to the Commission. Convey declared that many thousands of people would no longer be able to receive KWK if the application were granted.

WCDA seeks an increase from 250 to 500 watts. It operates on the same channel as KWK. Convey asserted that the increased power would result in interference with his station.

WCDA is operated by the Italian Educational Broadcasting Co., which desires the additional power to reach more listeners with its programs which, it said, are designed to "Make better American citizens" out of Italians in and around New York.

New Publix Radio Series to Begin On Tuesday Night

Harry Richman in First of Weekly Broadcasts Over Columbia Chain.

The first country wide radio program to originate in Brooklyn, N. Y., will be broadcast over the Columbia chain from the stage of the Paramount Theater there next Tuesday night at 10:30. This performance will inaugurate a series of Tuesday night programs.

Each broadcast will last 30 minutes and will be directed by Louis A. Witten, pioneer radio announcer, who will act as master of ceremonies. The series to be known as the "Publix Radio-vue" hour, will have as regular features Paul Ash's 20-piece band Bob West, Paramount organist; Elsie Thompson, the "singing organist," and the Publix gala stage show.

Harry Richman, in a special novelty revival entitled "There's No Hot Water in the Bronx" Johnny Perkins, comedian, and Paul Small, tenor, soloist, will take part in the premiere "Publix Radio-vue" hour.

The broadcast will follow the last regular performance at the Brooklyn Paramount Theater each Tuesday night. As the show ends, the theater will be thrown into darkness. Speakers throughout the house will be turned on to pick up the closing announcement from the WABC studios The spot light will flash to the stage where Witten will be ready at the microphone. The program will then shift to stage when Witten will begin speaking. The broadcasts will include singing by the audience as it accompanies West in his organ recital. Another microphone will pick up the voice of Elsie Thompson as she accompanies herself at the console.

Harry Richman, stage, radio and record star, is best known for his singing of "blues." He came into prominence in the "George White Scandals" four years ago. Since that time he has become internationally famous as singer and comedian.

Bob West has been featured as an organist and leader of audience singing in theaters throughout the west and South.

Elsie Thompson began her theater career at the age of 18 at the State Theater, Minneapolis. She has sung and played from stations in the Middle West, including WCCO and KSTP. She studied at the University of Minnesota.

New Publix Radio Series to Begin On Tuesday Night

Harry Richman in First of Weekly Broadcasts Over Columbia Chain.

The first country wide radio program to originate in Brooklyn, N. Y., will be broadcast over the Columbia chain from the stage of the Paramount Theater there next Tuesday night at 10:30. This performance will inaugurate a series of Tuesday night programs.

Each broadcast will last 30 minutes and will be directed by Louis A. Witten, pioneer radio announcer, who will act as master of ceremonies. The series to be known as the "Publix Radio-vue" hour, will have as regular features Paul Ash's 20-piece band Bob West, Paramount organist; Elsie Thompson, the "singing organist," and the Publix gala stage show.

Harry Richman, in a special novelty revival entitled "There's No Hot Water in the Bronx" Johnny Perkins, comedian, and Paul Small, tenor, soloist, will take part in the premiere "Publix Radio-vue" hour.

The broadcast will follow the last regular performance at the Brooklyn Paramount Theater each Tuesday night. As the show ends, the theater will be thrown into darkness. Speakers throughout the house will be turned on to pick up the closing announcement from the WABC studios The spot light will flash to the stage where Witten will be ready at the microphone. The program will then shift to stage when Witten will begin speaking. The broadcasts will include singing by the audience as it accompanies West in his organ recital. Another microphone will pick up the voice of Elsie Thompson as she accompanies herself at the console.

Harry Richman, stage, radio and record star, is best known for his singing of "blues." He came into prominence in the "George White Scandals" four years ago. Since that time he has become internationally famous as singer and comedian.

Bob West has been featured as an organist and leader of audience singing in theaters throughout the west and South.

Elsie Thompson began her theater career at the age of 18 at the State Theater, Minneapolis. She has sung and played from stations in the Middle West, including WCCO and KSTP. She studied at the University of Minnesota.

Two Million Records of His Song Sold

VERNON DALHART, whose recording of "The Prisoner's Song" is said to have sold to the extent of 2,000,000 mark. He is to sing in the Wonder Bakers broadcast over KSD at 8:30 next Tuesday night.

Diplomats Will Speak in Special Weekly Programs

Sir Esme Howard, Ambassador of Great Britain and dean of the Washington diplomatic corps, will inaugurate for the Columbia System a new weekly series of broadcasts. The series will extend over a year and will bring addresses by the Ambassadors and Ministers accredited to the United States.

The British Ambassador will speak from his study in the historic British embassy building in Washington at 6:45 Tuesday evening, Jan. 21. He will be introduced by William S. Paley, president of the Columbia System. His 10-minute talk will be in the nature of a farewell to the American and Canadian peoples. It will be preceded by 45 minutes of British music, most of which has been selected by Sir Esme. His taste runs to fifteenth and sixteenth century religious classics and to the old-time madrigals.

At weekly intervals the other 54 ambassadors and ministers stationed at Washington will broadcast.

Quartet Popular Over WCCO Sings In New Programs

Organist Also to Be Featured in Gold Medal Series on Columbia Net.

A series of "Gold Medal Fast Freight" programs will be broadcast over the Columbia net, including KMOX, from 7 to 7:30 Wednesday nights, beginning this week. WCCO, Minneapolis, is to be key station for the series.

The "Wheaties Quartet," which has sung from WCCO for three years and recently was voted the most popular radio feature on stations in the Northwest, will take part in all the programs. They will sing "popular" and oldtime songs and occasionally a yodel number.

A former theatrical organist, whose identity is to be concealed, also will be featured. He is said to be nationally known for broadcasting and recordings. He will play on a three-manual organ recently installed in the WCCO studios that is said to be the largest organ built for a radio station. He will do numbers voted for by listeners and also will extemporize medleys of favorite tunes.

The series will be sponsored by General Mills, Inc., of Minneapolis, owner of WCCO.

The choir of the Russian Orthodox Church of Madison, Ill. composed of 22 trained voices, will broadcast a program consisting chiefly of chorals and Russian folk songs over KMOX from 4:30 to 5 o'clock this afternoon under direction of the Rev. J. Manchuk.

By J. L.

BENIAMINO GIGLI, who sings in the Atwater Kent Hour tonight over KSD, was the son and chief assistant of a druggist in a small town in Italy. The tenor who has succeeded Caruso varied his work as a prescription clerk in his father's apothecary shop with singing and studying for the operatic stage. In 1908 he was entered as a student at the St. Cecilia's Academy of Music in Rome, when just 18 years of age. Six years later he made his debut in opera as Enzo in Ponchielli's "La Gioconda." He was given an ovation. After singing in the famous opera houses of Italy he toured continental Europe and South America. In 1918 he was chosen by Toscanini to sing Faust in the Boito Festival production of that Italian composer's opera, "Mefistofele." In this same opera Gigli made his debut at the Metropolitan in 1920.

THERE are persistent rumors in New York that the National Broadcasting Co. is planning a separate chain of stations to broadcast from special records, working with the Radio Victor Corporation. It is also rumored that the NBC seeks to take over WOR, Newark, N. J., which for a while was key station for the Columbia chain, and use it either to broadcast programs for advertisers who can not be accomodated on the present chains or to head a network for records broadcasting. All the rumors are stoutly denied by NBC and WOR officers.

The Musketeers Quartet will sing Monday evenings at 9:30 over KMOX instead of 6:30 as heretofore.

A two piano recital will be broadcast by Corinne Frederick and Estle Rucker over KMOX from 6:30 to 7 o'clock Saturday evening. Estle Rucker, who now makes her home in St. Louis, is a protege of the late Teresa Carreno, with whom she resided in Berlin. She has played over WEAF, New York. Corrine Frederick will continue to broadcast every Wednesday evening over KMOX.

ANNOUNCED as presented for women exclusively, a new series of quarter-hour playlets is to be put on the air by the Wilbur Coon Players under the title of "The Eternal Question."

The general theme tying the series together is the many romantic circumstances under which a man asks a maid the question of all questions—"Will you marry me?" These Eternal Question playlets have been broadcast for several months as a try-out. So successful have they proved that they are to be broadcast regularly every Wednesday evening at 6:45 over KSD and other NBC Red chain stations.

"The Sky Larks," composed of Merlita Davis, soprano; Blanche Herrick-Hopkins, contralto; J. Glenn Lee, tenor, and Frank H. Spahn, baritone, will sing favorites from light opera in Ampico broadcast at 9:30 tonight over KMOX. Doyne Neal will be accompanist.

The program:

"Love is Like a Fire Fly," from the Fire Fly; "Allah's Holiday," from Katinka; "The Bubble," from High Jinks; "Neath the Southern Moon," from Naughty Marietta, sung by Blanche Herrick-Hopkins; "Kiss Me Again," from Mlle. Modiste; "Moon Beams," from the Red Mill; "Sweethearts," from Sweethearts; "Auf Wiedersehn," from Blue Paradise, and "Good Night," from Ermine.

Henry Thies and his orchestra have joined the staff of WLW. His experience include orchestra work in Chicago and Cincinnati and a tour as musical director for the "Ben Hur" production.

The Happy Wonders broadcasts over an NBC chain, including KSD, are to be shifted Tuesday nights, beginning Jan. 21.

THE Fleischmann "Sunshine Hour," scheduled over KSD for next Thursday evening, with Graham McNamee as soloist, has been voluntarily cancelled by the sponsor, to allow broadcasting of a speech on the World Court by Charles Evans Hughes, to be made at a meeting of the New York Bar Association. Gladys Rice will be soloist with Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees on the program scheduled for Jan. 23.

Two new artists will make their debut in the program to be broadcast by Roxy's Gang tomorrow evening at 6:30 over KWK. David Healy, an Irish basso, who has had extensive concert experience in Ireland and Scotland, will be one of them. He will sing "Captain Mac," by Sanderson. The other is Helen Sada, lyric soprano, who will sing "Comin' Thru the Rye."

The Roxy Quartet will appear before the mike for the first time in several months.

WLW broadcasts a minstrel feature at 10:30 Friday nights.

THE world-famous conductor, Eugene Goossens, will conduct a special program by the Rochester Civic Orchestra in a Stromberg-Carlson concert from 9 to 9:30 tomorrow night over KWK.

Goossens was born in London in 1893 of Flemish parents. A musical heritage was his, for both his father and grandfather had won prestige in music. He studied at the Bruges Conservatoire, the Liverpool College of Music, and the Royal College of Musicians in London. The violin has remained his favorite instrument from early days.

Goossens has conducted the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra for several years, with Guy Fraser Harrison as assistant, and is in general musical charge of the Civic Orchestra's activities. He has conducted, as guest, most of the principal orchestras of America, and is the composer of an opera, "Judith," which was recently produced in London.

HEINRICH GEBHARD, pianist and composer, who is to play in the Baldwin concert at 6:30 this evening over KWK, was born in Germany. Coming to this country at the age of 8, he lived in Boston, where he received preliminary musical training. There followed three years of intensive study with Leschititsky in Vienna and a return to America. At the age of 18 he made his debut with an orchestra at Copley Hall, Boston, where he still makes his home. Repeated appearances in recital and as soloist with leading orchestras have made him widely known. The New York String Quartet, which also will play in the Baldwin concert, was organized in 1922 and in seven years has achieved a great reputation. Before its first appearance in public, three years were spent in daily ensemble practice.

The time of the National Farm and Home Hour of the National Broadcasting Co. and United States Department of Agriculture will be changed to start 15 minutes earlier than the present schedule, beginning tomorrow. The change is to 11:45 a. m. to 12:30 noon.

The Farmers' Union program on Jan. 15, the National Grange broadcast on Jan. 18, the Farm Bureau program on Jan. 25 and the Annual Outlook Report of the Department of Agriculture on Jan. 27, will all be affected by the change.

The first of a series of programs featuring composers and exponents of American "popular" music, with examples of their songs, will begin over KSD next Wednesday evening, when the Happy Wonder Bakers will have Vernon Dalhart as soloist. Dalhart popularized "The Prisoner's Song," "The Death of Floyd Collins," "Golden Slippers," "In the Baggage Coach Ahead" and others in a similar vein.

UNDER the direction of Alan Dinehart, a Broadway actor, producer and dramatist, who will serve in capacity of dramatic counsel, a new series of radio dramatizations, entitled "Conoco Adventurers," will be broadcast over an NBC network from the Chicago studios on Thursday evenings, from 10 to 10:30, beginning Jan. 16. The series, sponsored by the Continental Oil Co. of Denver, Colo., will be based on historic incidents in the development of America's great West and Southwest.

Josef Koestner, NBC conductor and composer, has written original transitional and background music for the dramas, and will conduct the orchestra and male quartet during the series.

Dinehart will co-operate with Don Bernard, program manager; Beverly Latham, continuity writer, and F. S. Ibbett, production man, in arranging and staging the dramatizations.

The first of the series, entitled "Zeb Pike and the Blue Mountain," will tell of the exploration of the newly acquired Louisiana territory in 1806, and the discovery of Pike's Peak by the expedition headed by Lieut. Zebulon Pike, for whom the mountain was named.

The series will be broadcast over WLS, KWK, WDAF, WOW, WHO, WLW, WMC, KVOO, WKY, WFAA, KTHS, KPRC, Houston; WOAI, KOA and KSL.

CHESTER J. GRUBER, native St. Louisan who, in 11 weeks broadcasting his Tony Cabooch skits over KMOX, won a place as a featured entertainer in the Majestic Hour of the Columbia chain, has returned from New York where he played at the auto show Monday evening. Gruber plans to depart for New York, Jan. 17 to begin his network broadcast on Jan. 19.

Frances Shelly, featured player in "Wake Up and Dream," will sing "What Is This Thing Called Love?" during the La Palina Smoker over the Columbia chain next Wednesday evening at 8:30.

Miss Shelly, who was born in Toronto, Canada, came to the attention of Broadway managers when word of her singing ability reached them from "scouts" in the Canadian theaters. Rosalie Stewart gave her an opportunity in her revue, "A La Carte." She next entertained in New York night clubs, notably the Richman and Helen Morgan clubs. She subsequently appeared in "Rain or Shine" and followed her success there in "Americana." She has since been playing in the Deauville Club in London, where she was seen by Charles B. Cochran and placed in his revue, "Wake Up and Dream."

Bessie Love and Charles King are to be starred in a "Voices from Filmland" program over the Columbia chain at 6:30 tomorrow evening. Earl Burtnett's orchestra, the Filmland Studio Orchestra and the Biltmore Trio also will be heard.

Miss Love jumped with prominence in the talkie-extravaganza, "Broadway Melody."

James Stanley, basso, will be soloist in an Eveready concert over KSD next Tuesday evening. Stanley's voice has made him one of the more popular of American concert singers. For years he has been soloist with the New York Symphony and Russian Symphony orchestras.

Under Nathaniel Shilkret the orchestra will open the program with Franz Liszt's "Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody." "Alt Wien," Godowski's musical description of Vienna life, will be the second orchestral number.

Stanley will sing "The Coast of High Barbary," a rousing old sea chantey; "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," accompanied by a stringed quartet, and the "Song of the Flea."

A ne wfeature over KMOX Sunday afternoons from 1 to 1:30 starting today, will be dance music by Gordon Jenkins' orchestra.

A Word to the Wise...

"CONFRONTED by the greatest midwinter demand in radio history, the Atwater Kent Manufacturing Co., has been unable to close down over the holidays for the usual Jan. 1 inventory.... Throughout December our production has been speeded up to man-power capacity in an endeavor to catch up with a demand unprecedented in the annals of radio manufacture and merchandising."

"Ordinarily our factories close during the holiday season for inventory taking, but not so this year. Wheels are turning as rapidly today as they turn at peak production seasons."

What's New In Radio Industry

Six New Majestic Receivers to Be Shown at Dealers' Meeting Tomorrow—Koerber-Brenner Co. Now Exclusive Victor Distributer—Two New Stromberg-Carlson Models—Zenith Reports Orders on Hand Will Keep Plant Operating Full Time for at Least Four Months—Lacy Made General Sales Manager for Perryman Tube Concern—Trade Notes.

tails of New Majestic Radio Sets and Combinations.

A new line of Majestic receivers ill be shown to the dealers in the Louis district at a meeting torrow afternoon in Hotel Chase, which the Benwood-Linze Co., stributer, will be host.

There are six sets in the new line four straight receivers and two dio-phonograph combinations. All ve the same basic chassis, consting of four radio frequency ages, linear power detector and two audio stages, the last of which ses two 45-type tubes in push pull. There is an automatic sensitivity control to give uniform range on ll wave lengths, and a new dyamic speaker, designed to be free of "fuzziness" or barrel tone at any volume. The electric pickup used in the two combination models is new and was designed by Majestic engineers to handle band and orchestra selections at full volume. The electric motor drive for the turntable has a convenient speed control. A switch under the control knob permits instant change from phonograph to radio and vice versa.

There is a new low-priced model —the 90—which has a Tudor design cabinet in American walnut with grained butt walnut center panel, fluted corner posts and molded top rail and side panels. The speaker opening is covered with walnut brown brocade. The escutcheon plate is in old bronze finish and the control knobs are of walnut with bronzed insets.

A Model 91 is in early English style, done in American walnut, with matched walnut butt center panel overlaid at the top with Australian lacewood, and has a gracefully bowed front.

A Model 92 has a highboy Jacobean cabinet of American walnut, with doors of matched butt walnut front and back, interesting molding effects and reeded legs. Door pulls are in old bronze to match the escutcheon plate.

The fourth of the receivers is A Model 93, in which Australian lacewood is used freely with matched and grained walnut to give a cabinet of unusual beauty. This also has fluted posts and reeded legs.

A Model 102 is one of the combination Majestic combinations. Its cabinet is in English style, with matched butt walnut center and side panels, with overlay of lacewood. The bottom front rail drops forward revealing a large compartment for record albums. The top has a silent automatic support.

The other combination is A Model 103, in which American walnut is given dignified English design treatment, the front being enriched with imported marquetry banding.

Unusual sensitivity for distance tuning and selectivity are claimed for these new Majestics. The speaker is definitely improved. In fact, the entire receiver chassis has been improved with heavier parts, more extensive shielding and other betterments, all of which are evident in the greatly increased weight or chassis and speaker.

Tomorrow's Majestic dealer meeting at the Chase Hotel is to begin at 1:30 p. m. and a dinner at 6:30 in the evening. Speakers are scheduled to include: Harold J. Wrape, president of the Benwood-Linze Co.; William T. Vollborth, Western district sales manager for the Grigsby-Grunow Co.; Duane Wannamaker, director of advertising for the Grigsby-Grunow Co.; John E. Maunder, territorial supervisor; H. M. Pauley, service engineer, and B. S. Tucker, sales manager for the Benwood-Linze Co.

There have been several changes in the Benwood-Linze Co. organization. E. A. Reutner, who has been sales promotion manager, has been made district manager in charge of the entire St. Louis metropolitan area, and P. H. Cropsey has been appointed district sales manager in charge of the outlying territory.

Stromberg-Carlson Lowboy and Combination Introduced.

The two newest Stromberg-Carlson receivers are a No. 654 radio-phonograph combination and a No. 652 low type console set. Triple screen grid radio amplification, permitting linear power detection and a single audio output stage, distinguish the radi. part of the No. 654. A scientifically baffled electro-dynamic speaker gives exceptionally high output for a given electrical input. The phonograph turntable is rotated by a silent electric motor with a switch conveniently near the turntable, while an automatic stop which operates on either spiral or eccentric stopping grooves is used to halt the turntable. The volume control knob, when turned to the left, throws the phonograph into circuit, and a separate pickup is of the low impedance, flexible armature type, which greatly prolongs the useful life of records.

The walnut-finished cabinet is in Gothic style with the three control knobs fitting into the arch patterns. To open the doors, the hand is placed in finger grooves concealed behind high relief on the top frieze.

The No. 652 receiver includes all the radio receiver features, including the highly efficient loud speaker, but does not have the phonograph features. The walnut cabinet enclosing this model is extremely compact, its depth measuring only 15 inches. This model was designed without doors.

Koerber-Brenner Co. Now Sole Victor Jobber Here.

The Koerber-Brenner Co., 1115 Pestalozzi street, which for years was exclusive Victor distributer, then for some months shared distribution with another firm, has been made exclusive distributer for the Victor division of the Radio Corporation of America. Which means that it will distribute Victor receivers and radio-phonograph combinations, as well as Victor records and phonographs.

This firm, of which H. G. Koerber is president and H. B. Bibbs, who came to St. Louis recently after 12 years with Brunswick in Chicago, is general manager, began business as a musical instrument distributer in the 1000 block of Olive street about 25 years ago. Ten years later it moved to 1508 Washington avenue and later to 1714 Washington. Expanding business necessitated another move—this time into an Anheuser-Busch building on Pestalozzi street, where it occupies 22,000 feet of floor space on two floors.

The Koerber-Brenner Co. will distribute Victor radio in the usual Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois territory and also in Western Kentucky.

Klugh Predicts Zenith Will Find 1930 Its Best Year.

Paul B. Klugh, vice president and general manager of the Zenith Radio Corporation, reports that production of the new Zenith sets is well under way and that the corporation has more than $1,500,000 cash on hand. Zenith production in 1929 was twice as large as in any previous year and Zenith dealers now number 6000.

Orders booked from distributers are sufficient to keep the Zenith factory working full time with normal force throughout the first four months of this year. Klugh predicts that 1930 will be Zenith's best year.

R. H. Woodward Appointed Crosley Sales Manager.

R. H. Woodford, sales manager of the radio division of the Stewart-Warner Co. for five years, has been appointed general sales manager of the Crosley Radio Corporation of Cincinnati. He succeeds Neal E. Newman, resigned.

Perryman Promotes R. B. Lacey.

R. B. Lacey, who for three years has been Western sales manager for the Perryman Electric Co., has been made general sales manager and, so, will be in full charge of merchandising Perryman tubes. Lacey was a jobber for seven years and also has been sales manager for several large concerns, among them the Western Steel Works.

A STATEMENT OF OLDSMOBILE-VIKING POLICY for 1930

. . A message of interest to everyone who expects to buy a car this year.

AT THIS TIME, when the public is accustomed to look for changes in motor car design, it is only natural that Olds Motor Works should make an announcement concerning both its policy and its products for the coming year.

Olds Motor Works is pledged to a policy of progress—a policy that promises, in part . . . "Changes in design solely for the sake of progress—never for the sake of change alone."

This policy, as it applies to the two products of Olds Motor Works, is briefly . . .

. . . to give still greater value in the Oldsmobile Six, the Fine Car of Low Price . . .

. . . to provide, in the Viking, a modern 90-degree, V-type Eight of high quality, at medium price.

Certain changes have been made in Oldsmobile design. These changes are chiefly in the body of the car, although advancements have also been made in the chassis. In every case, the changes tend to add to Oldsmobile value, without affecting either the fundamental design of the car or its characteristic body lines.

Naturally, no changes have been made in the great Viking Eight. The Viking is a new car—a thoroughly modern 90-degree V-type Eight, incorporating advancements in V-eight design that establish it as one of the outstanding engineering achievements of recent years.

Viking, as well as Oldsmobile, represents true progress in modern motoring. Viking, as well as Oldsmobile, is the splendid result of an ideal—an ideal that is exemplified by the four great responsibilities Olds Motor Works recognizes toward every Oldsmobile and Viking owner.

The first of these responsibilities is to design progressively, utilizing the full resources of the General Motors Research Laboratories, the Proving Ground, and Fisher Body, as well as its own broad facilities.

The second is to build faithfully . . . maintaining standards of quality and workmanship which are best expressed by the pledge every Oldsmobile-Viking worker follows, "Anything short of my best is not acceptable."

And not content merely with designing and building well, Olds Motor Works goes further, and pledges itself to sell honestly—representing its products, in every detail and to every buyer, exactly as they are . . . and, finally, to service sincerely—maintaining an interest in every sale far beyond the time of purchase, and joining with its dealers in carrying out the most equitable service policy in existence today.

While Olds Motor Works builds two cars, in two major price classes, each represents the most progressive engineering thought, the finest manufacturing practice, and the best value it is possible to give at the price. Each is truly ". . . a car for the American family that, at a moderate investment, gratifies their finer tastes as well as satisfies their every need."

Now is the time to see these cars and to compare them with the latest offerings of the automotive industry. Make your own examination.

WEEK'S STOCK TRADE DOWN TO LOW BASIS OF JULY, 1928

Wednesday's Total of 1,638,000 Shares Represented a Significant Shrinkage From the 16,410,000 of Oct. 29.

LATE PRODUCTION FIGURES ARE AWAITED

Flush Funds in the Market Reflect Primarily the Return Currency Flow That Normally Begins After Christmas.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The Evening Post, in copyrighted weekly financial review, says:

"With a lapse in speculative interest the market has drifted into a series of dull trading sessions representing the smallest volume since July, 1928. Wednesday's total of 1,638,000 shares presents a significant shrinkage from 16,410,000 on Oct. 29 and a normal 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 shares last year. Listless trading in the recent past has usually followed major setbacks in the market. In 1926 and twice in 1928 the market emerged from these quiet intervals on the upside. Confidence that the market this time will eventually pull through the prevailing trade area on to an improved price level is inspired both by precedent and logic. Yet the parallel between the present and recent experiences of this character is not sufficiently exact to be wholly convincing.

Await More Definite Signs.

"Now the attitude of those who make markets seems to be neither to buy nor sell on an extensive scale until some more definite signs come to light on the 1930 trend in business. In 1926 and in 1928 when trading turned dull industry presented to the market no such obstacle as now. Then it was not a question of confidence in business. Now an upturn in the business cycle is the thing most needed to restore widespread confidence. Within a few days sufficient figures on last month's productive activity will be in to show how low production fell. In November the index dropped to theoretical normal, but it is certain that the December level was substantially lower. Bottom for December should be somewhere in the neighborhood of the December, 1927, bottom, which marked a turning point in the last previous business recession. Whether as in that year bottom in the current recession was touched in December remains a question for future answer.

Building May Be First.

"Nobody entertains any serious doubts of a 1930 upturn in business activity but it is exceedingly difficult at this date to time the recovery. The full benefits of the Hoover program will not be felt for months. A sizeable volume of construction work is contemplated and unless motor buying in the next few months exceeds present expectations it seems reasonable to presume that recovery will be led by the building industry. That industry has been in a depression longer than any other major group. Money has continued easy consistently since the stock adjustment. So long as the market does not multiply its credit demands the flow of cheap funds may be directed more easily into business channels. In the increased supply of cheap funds is the real basis for prediction of improvement in business.

Return Flow of Currency.

"Flush funds in the market this week reflect primarily the return currency flow that normally begins after Christmas but does not subside until around Jan. 20. Still another force lately has been working in this direction in the form of returned foreign funds. Last year the turn of the year brought shipments of funds withdrawn abroad previous to Dec. 31, but it seemed more questionable this year whether January would witness a repetition of this influence favorable to the money market. New financing has been held down through a lack of demand on the part of investors, and through a determination by the bankers not to rush. Bond prices continue firm but 1930 to date has revealed no sweeping demand for these descriptions of a character anticipated a month ago. It will be interesting later when new financing begins in volume to observe the proportion represented by bonds and that represented by stocks.

STOCKS MOVE IN NARROW TRADING AREA AT WEEK-END

About a Score of Issues, However, Close 2 to 4 Points Lower — Total Sales Are Only 873,750 Shares.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Bears poked idly at the stock market today, as it drifted along in the same narrow trading area to which it has adhered all the week.

Closing quotations showed only a scattering of price changes of a point or more, although about a score of issues ended the day 2 to 4 points lower. Total sales for the two-hour session were only 873,750 shares, about two-thirds of last Saturday's turnover.

There was nothing in the day's news to influence the market, and it was left to seek its own level. The week-end liquidation was in fair volume, as many traders who had been discouraged with the market's lack of direction decided to lighten their holdings. Stocks rallied a little in the last half hour from the lowest levels of the session, under the influence of short covering.

Exchanges Fairly Steady.

Foreign exchange rates held fairly steady, but showed no indications of rallying. The week has passed without any further exports of gold and the outflow of the yellow metal is believed to be definitely checked for a time. Bankers look for a continuation of easy credit next week, although the midmonth requirements may prevent any further appreciable decline for a few days. Friday's money market rates carry over the week-end.

The day's news included a firming up to steel scrap quotations in the Chicago area, but price trends for finished steel remained somewhat irregular. It was announced that the dividend declared on the Fox Film Class A stock last Dec. 5 would be paid in script rather than cash. This was regarded as a reasonable course to pursue, in view of the obvious need of conserving cash until proposed plans can be effected. Further weekly trade and business reviews indicated gradual improvements.

Few Rails Higher.

A few of the rail stocks were sent higher, including Delaware & Hudson, New York Central, Missouri-Kansas-Texas, Southern, and Texas & Pacific closing a point or two up. The Advance Rumely issues were sent moderately higher, in what appeared to be short covering. Further pool activity was indicated in International Nickel, but the stock closed unchanged.

Such shares as U. S. Steel, Allied Chemical, Atlantic Coast Line, Chesapeake & Ohio, General American Tank, Hudson Motor, American Can, Otis Elevator, Pan-American, Pullman, Safeway Stores, U. S. Industrial Alcohol and Youngstown Sheet closed off about 2 to 3 points. International Business Machines lost 4 points.

Commodities rallied. Wheat futures closed about 1 cent a bushel higher. Corn mounted 1 cent and more. Cotton rallied in short covering.

A feature of the foreign exchanges was the Japanese yen, which rallied 1-10 cent to 49.15 cents, coincident with lifting of the gold embargo. Sterling cables were unchanged at $4.87.

WEEKLY COPPER REVIEW

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Although the better demand for copper from domestic consumers early in the week tapered off, foreign buying has continued in somewhat larger volume. Daily bookings for export thus far in January are estimated at about 1500 tons, the best rate since late in the summer. The fact that orders have been for prompt shipment has created an impression that stocks abroad are relatively small. Domestic buying was for January-February shipment, but consumers later appeared disposed to await publication of December statistics before making additional commitments. Producers continue to quote electrolytic at 18 cents delivered in Connecticut Valley.

New York Coffee.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Coffee futures were less active with prices reacting slightly from yesterday's advances under realizing, and reports of somewhat irregular markets in Brazil. No. 7 contracts opened at a decline of 1 to 15 points and closed 4 to 7 points lower. Sales 17,000. Santos contracts opened 9 to 21 points lower and closed net unchanged to 15 points lower. Sales 24,000. Closing quotations, No. 7 contracts: January, 8.50; March, 8.43; May, 8.62; July, 7.96; September, 7.91; December, 7.84. Santos contracts, January, 13.60; March, 13.10; May, 12.10; July, 11.67; September, 11.45; December, 11.30.

Spot coffee steady. Rio, 7s 10⅝ to 10¾; Santos, 4s 14¾ to 15¼. Cost and freight offers included Bourbon, 3s and 4s at 12.35 to 14.55.

Rio exchange on London 1-16d higher. Dollar buying rate 50 reis higher. Rio market 50 reis higher to 500 reis lower. Santos unchanged to 300 reis higher. Brazilian port receipts 41,000. Jundiahy receipts 10,000.

New York Sugar.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Raw sugar was unchanged today with sales of 14,000 bags of Philippines for Jan.-Feb. shipment at 3.77 and 1,700 bags for Feb.-March shipment [illegible].

The continued liberal offerings in the spot market seemed to discourage holders in the futures market and after an irregular opening prices declined under [illegible]

WHEAT CLOSES HIGHER AFTER EARLY DECLINE

ST. LOUIS MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, Jan. 11.—Wheat futures started the day lower, but recovered and closed ⅛c to 1c higher. The downturn was associated with lower Liverpool market, while talk of expected buying by Portugal next week was called one late factor. Corn prices also finished better.

In the cash grain market soft wheat was steady to ½c lower. Premiums, however, were stronger, with 6½c to 7c above the Chicago May figure being paid for good No. 2. Receipts were a little larger and there was pretty good selections offered. Good milling wheat and sound milling grades were wanted, but ordinary qualities and garlicky kinds moved slowly. Hard wheat was down ½c to 1c with the late market off ½c. Offerings were light and clearance was pretty good. The basis as compared to future was a little better, tending to slow up demand from mills. Sales of No. 1 early were at 4c below the Chicago May figure, and No. 3 at 6c below. A car of Kansas 12.38 per cent protein sold at 5c below. Corn was steady to 1c higher and ½c closer to futures. Elevators were pretty good purchasers of the yellow variety. Oats were steady. There was a limited demand. The better class of grain went to local trade and mills.

Wheat opened fractionally lower and then sold off a full cent early. Winnipeg was off more than cent early. Liverpool ranged down 1¼d to 2d. Corn was fractionally lower early.

May wheat opened at $1.27⅝, July wheat $1.28⅛. May corn 95⅛c and July corn 97⅛c.

Local wheat receipts, which were 98,000 bushels, compared with 88,400 a week ago and 110,600 a year ago, included 55 cars local and 15 through. Corn receipts, which were 91,000 bushels, compared with 54,000 a week ago and 299,600 a year ago, included 53 cars local and 12 through. Oats receipts, which were 33,000 bushels, compared with 44,000 a week ago and 84,000 a year ago, included 12 cars local and three through. Hay receipts were four cars local and one through.

COTTON CLOSES STRONG AT ADVANCE IN PRICE

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—A slight decline at the opening of the cotton market today was followed by rallies with business becoming more active and the tone decidedly firmer in the late trading. Some trade and commission house buying was reported as well as covering and the advance which carried March contracts up to 17.51c or 22 points net higher, was accompanied by reiterated reports that the Federal Farm Board would use its influence against an increase in acreage. March closed at 17.49c with the general market closing strong at net advances of 17 to 22 points.

Spot 17.50 Cents.

The opening was steady at a decline of 1 to 4 points with the more active months showing net losses of about 2 to 6 points during the early trading under further liquidation which may have been combined with some southern and local selling. The latter was encouraged by relatively easy Liverpool cables, but the offerings were comparatively light and the market soon steadied on week-end covering. This became more active, while a little more trade buying and a moderate commission house demand seemed to develop in the late trading. January contracts sold up from 17.05c to 17.29c and May from 17.47c to 17.75c and closing quotations were within a point or two of the best.

Liverpool cable said that some trade calling in that market had been supplied by local, London and Bombay liquidation. These more favorable reports from the British goods markets may have encouraged the absorption of the early offerings here, but the factors most generally discussed on the later advance were the rumored attitude of the Federal farm board with reference to acreage and a possibility that the organization of the National Marketing Corporation would have a generally strengthening effect on the spot situation.

The amount of cotton on shipboard at U. S. ports awaiting clearance the end of the week was estimated at 150,000 bales against 170,000 last year. Traders appeared to find nothing in week-end reviews of the goods situation to call for special comment.

CHICAGO WHEAT HIGHER IN CLOSING TRADES

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—Brisk rallies took place today in the wheat market here, largely as a result of free buying from speculators who were quick to collect profits. The market here was assisted upward by report that Japan is purchasing Australian wheat at better than the European basis and by assertion that Portugal will be after wheat next week from North America.

Chicago closing quotations on wheat were firm at the day's top level, up 2⅛c a bushel from low points touched early, and ⅛c to 1½c above yesterday's finish. Corn closed at ⅜@½c to 1c gain, oats ¼c to ½c higher, and provisions varying from 50c setback to an equal advance.

At first, the wheat trade showed itself sensitive today to the effect of sharp breaks in Liverpool prices. New downturns that ensued in Chicago prices were soon followed, however, by development of broader general demand for future deliveries and in particular by a sudden switch that previous sellers made to the opposite side of the market. Recoveries in wheat prices, though, did not attain much momentum until after the market had dropped to below any level heretofore reached since Dec. 21.

An interesting development today regarding the outlook for an increase of wheat export business from North America was taken that estimates of world import requirements as compiled by the principal European authority are usually revised upward as many as six times every season. A leading Chicago crop expert issued a statement today giving in detail the first and last estimates for each of the six seasons beginning with 1923-24 and showing that the average enlargement was 63,000,000 bushels between the annual initial estimate and the final. On the other hand, export business today both from the United States and Canada was described as continuing to be of disappointing volume.

Corn and oats shared in the renewal of confidence that wheat buyers displayed. Besides, arrivals of corn in Chicago today and at other market centers were small and the movement of corn was generally expected to remain meager unless there is a material advance in prices.

Provisions ruled easy owing to downturns in the value of hogs.

New York Cottonseed Oil.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The cottonseed oil market, although dull, showed considerable strength today and closed 5 to [illegible] points higher. Offerings were scarce and the upturn was easily accomplished on refiners support and local covering for the week-end and in advance of the December consumption report which is expected early this week. Sales 2300 barrels. Prime crude, 7.00; prime summer yellow, spot, 8.55; Jan closed [illegible] March, 8.75; May, 8.93; July 9.14.

many as six times every season. A leading Chicago crop expert issued a statement today giving in detail the first and last estimates for each of the six seasons beginning with 1923-24 and showing that the average enlargement was 63,000,000 bushels between the annual initial estimate and the final. On the other hand, export business today both from the United States and Canada was described as continuing to be of disappointing volume.

Corn and oats shared in the renewal of confidence that wheat buyers displayed. Besides, arrivals of corn in Chicago today and at other market centers were scanty and the movement of corn was generally expected to remain meager unless there is a material advance in prices.

Provisions ruled easy owing to downturns in the value of hogs.

CURB MARKET QUIET AND PRICES IRREGULAR

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Extreme dullness characterized today's irregular Curb Market, the day's sales of 332,700 shares being the smallest of any session for nearly two years. Many floor traders, who had been finding it difficult to make any money in trying to catch the turns, took the day off, and others complained of not making enough trades to pay expenses. Public interest was at low ebb.

Most of the ordinarily active utilities moved within the range of a point or so, and showed only small fractional changes. Commonwealth & Southern preferred stood out with a gain of 1¾ points. Cities Service improved slightly, but Electric Bond & Share was heavy.

Electrical manufacturing issues displayed a firm undertone, General Electric of Germany rising 3¾ points and Eisler Electric 1½. Oils showed little change. Renewal of some selling pressure against some of the aviation issues carried Roosevelt Field to a new low at $2 a share and Transcontinental Air Transport off $1 to $7 a share, which contrasts with last year's high of 33⅞.

Deere & Co., Ford of Canada B, New England Telephone and Spiegel, May, Stern preferred advanced 4 to 5½ points on a small turnover and Tubize Artifical Silk sold 2 points higher. Neisner Bros. preferred declined 8¾ to a new low at 115½ and Lerner Stores fell 3¼.

Weakness of Associated Gas & Electric 5s of 1968 and Detroit International Bridge 6½s of 1952 featured the irregular trading in Curb bonds. Shell Union Oil 5s, the most active issue, declined fractionally.

PRICES SHADE LOWER IN DULL BOND TRADE

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The bond market failed to reflect much enthusiasm today, but its dullness was not regarded as surprising in view of the recent advance and the large volume of new financing now impending. Prices shaded off in an extremely quiet two-hour session.

American Telephone debentures 5s, which broke on the announcement that a new bond of the same coupon was to be offered at 99½, hardened and the closing price was fractionally higher on a good turnover. Postal Telegraph 5s were also active, rising ⅜.

Rails eased. Atchison General 4s, Baltimore & Ohio 5s, Central Pacific 5s and a few other high-grade issues dipped about half a point on the average. The feature of the division, however, was a 12⅛ point advance in Cuba Northern Railway 5½s to 73 on small buying. The industrials made slender changes. Fisk Rubber 5s advanced 2 points, but only $2000 principal amount was involved. National Dairy 5¼s rose to within ⅛ of their 1929 peak.

Typical week-end stagnation marked the United States Governments. Dealings covered only a few of the listings and buyers were able to get their securities at virtually yesterday's prices.

After a week of moderate strength, foreign obligations turned irregularly lower. Kingdom of Italy 7s, Norway 6s of 1952, and Australian 5s of 1957 lost a point each.

Low-Priced Common Stocks.

The stocks of many leading corporations now selling in the high-price range could have been bought for $3 to $20 a share just a few years ago.

Within a very few more years many corporations whose stocks are now selling on the New York Stock Exchange for less than $25 a share may become dominating factors in their fields and important forces in our economic life.

We have prepared a list of such issues that appear to possess the elements of ultimate prosperity.

HOGS SHOW LOSS IN TRADE OF WEEK

Rising Prices of Dressed Lambs at Eastern Wholesale Markets Help Trade Here.

NATIONAL STOCKYARDS, Ill., Jan. 11.—(U. S. Department of Agriculture.)—Because of storms the greater part of the week, delayed trains were the rule rather than the exception. This may not have had any definite bearing on the market trends, but it worked disadvantageously, in that it required all-day sessions to dispose of light receipts. On Monday, with a most liberal steer offering, the price curve turned downward. Afterward, however, conditions were reversed and values started climbing, with final steer prices 25c higher than the close of last week. Other classes closed as follows: Mixed yearlings, heifers and vealers 50c higher, cows and cutters 25c higher, low cutters 10c to 15c higher, medium bulls 25c to 50c higher, stocker and feeder cattle 25c higher. Tops for the week: 1339-lb steers, 1034-lb yearlings and 831-lb mixed yearlings, $15; heifers, $14; cows, $10; sausage bulls, $9.10; vealers, $17. Heavy steers averaging 1432 and 1412 lbs scored $12.10 and $13, while those scaling 1321 to 1383 lbs ranged from $11.65 to $15, bulk $11.65 to $13.50. Medium weight steers averaging 1205 to 1290 lbs ranged from $11.25 to $13.65, bulk $11.25 to $13. Other medium weight steers, or those scaling 1111 to 1179 lbs, ranged from $10.75 to $13.25, bulk $10.90 to $12.50. Light-weight steers ranged from $9.35 to $15, the majority $10.25 to $13.25, with bulk of all weights $10.35 to $13.25. Fat mixed yearlings and heifers ranged from $12.50 to $15, bulk $12.50 to $14; medium flesh descriptions largely $10.50 to $12.50. Most beef cows earned $7 to $8.75; low cutters, largely $4.75 to $5.25. Good and choice vealers registered $16.50 Friday, which was the same price paid at the close of last week.

Hog Supplies Under Year Ago

Receipts of swine this week totaled approximately 77,000 as compared with actual marketings of 57,376 last week and 96,647 corresponding week last year. Although supplies were considerably greater than last week, they were materially below the total of this time last year. The bearish effect of liberal receipts was more than balanced by expanded shipping outlet and porker values at midweek were the highest since October. Rising prices were undoubtedly due in large measure to the unfavorable road conditions and the prospect of a shortage before hogs could again move freely to market. This fear proved groundless and during the last two days, values dropped to a point 15c to 25c lower than the prices of last Saturday, with packing sows 10c off. Pigs and light lights shared the net decline of the period. Top price rose on Thursday to $10.15 but on Saturday, a few bunches of choice lightweights at $9.90 were the only hogs able to pass the practical top of $9.85. Bulk of 160 to 230-pound weights moved at $9.75 to $9.85 on that session, and majority of 240 to 280-pound butchers scored $9.55 to $9.70, a few down to $9.50. During the latter half of the week big packers bought quite freely through during the early sessions, Eastern order buyers completely donimated trade. Most 130 to 150-pound light lights finished at $9.50 to $9.80 and 90 to 130-pound slaughter pigs bulked at $9 to $9.60, light pigs down to $8.50. Packing sows cleared at $8 to $8.10.

Lamb Prices Higher

Receipts of sheep and lambs this week approximated 6100 head as compared with actual arrivals of 5589 last week and 2744 the corresponding week of 1929. Rising prices of dressed lamb at Eastern wholesale markets proved the dominant feature of lamb trade this week and prices scored continual upturns in the face of moderately liberal marketings here and at other principal livestock centers. Local prices advanced around 75c, compared with the prices at the close of last week and lower grades shared the upturns. Fat ewes, on the other hand, met an indifferent outlet and quotations were unchanged. The highest prices since July, 1929, were paid when a deck of choice 88-lb fed lambs as well as smaller lots of natives went to packers on Friday at $14.25. Bulk of fat lambs during the period cashed at $13.50 to $14.00, with less desirable descriptions down to $13. At the close most sales were recorded at $13.75 to $14.25. Quality was largely good throughout though at the end of the week most offerings were good to choice. Throwout lambs turned largely at $9 to $10. Yearling wethers were too scarce to quote but it is the opinion of many members of the trade that better grade would sell up to $11.50. Fat ewes in odd lots bulked at $4.50 to $5.50, culls down to $2.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

·PENROD JASHBER·
A New Penrod Story
by BOOTH TARKINGTON

Penrod is back after an absence of 14 years. In response to requests from readers of every age, Booth Tarkington has written a new story about the favorite boy of the generation.

No author since Mark Twain has written about boys with such understanding and fine humor as Booth Tarkington. And "Penrod Jashber" is even funnier than his previous Penrod stories. The hilarious adventures of this popular boy will be published in daily installments.

STARTING TOMORROW IN THE POST-DISPATCH

"We got a big case goin' on up here now, Bill."

The Story

Penrod and his pals take up the detective business and involve themselves in a series of the most uproarious adventures that ever shook the Schofield neighborhood.

George B. Jashber, alias Penrod, aided by Sam, Herman and Verman, and slightly impeded by the critical attitude of his girl, Marjorie, makes the nights hideous for young men attempting to call on his older sister.

Penrod trails a dangerous looking character, suspected of wearing false whiskers. He turns out to be little Marjorie's respectable Uncle Montgomery. Another man, thought by Penrod to be a desperate horse thief, is finally trailed to his lair—in the Y. M. C. A.

Penrod's shadowing activities have strange consequences that frantic neighbors and the mystified police finally trace to the machinations of the boy detective.

Booth Tarkington

began his literary career by dictating stories to an indulgent sister long before he himself could write.

At this early age desperate robber plays were given in the Tarkington barn, and the first pages of many tales of blood were written. They always began, "It was dusk and two horsemen were seen riding over the top of a hill." Memories of these early days unquestionably furnish much of the material for his Penrod stories.

After college at Purdue and Princeton, Tarkington took up writing in earnest. His earnings for the first five years were $22.50. Today he is among the highest paid authors in America.

Penrod is one of the favorite characters created by this popular author. He ranks with Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn in the hearts of those who like stories about genuine boys.

umber of Offers Reported for Delmar Property — Resale of Garavelli Corner Pending.

By Berry Moore.

Sonnenfeld's, dealers in women's ady-to-wear apparel, has re wed the lease of its quarters mprising the entire six-story ilding at 610 Washington ave e, the rental provisions of which ve the property a record valua n.

The lease, which is for a term 25 years, calls for annual net ntal of $35,000, or a total of 75,000 for the entire term. This at the rate of 5 per cent on val tion of $700,000, or $14,583 a ot for the Washington avenue ontage of the property. The ne tiations were handled by Martin Breitt.

The property has a frontage on ashington avenue of 48 feet, with depth extending through to St. arles street. The second front e on St. Charles street greatly hances the value of the property, hich doubtless the negotiations ok into consideration. Both the ilding and the ground are owned Edward Nugent and Byron Nu nt Jr.

her Washington Avenue Leases.

The Weil Clothing Co. only re ntly purchased the 99-year lease ld by the Lindell Real Estate Co. the eight-story building at the rthwest corner of Washington enue and Eighth street, which e clothing company has occu ed for more than 20 years. The e to this property which has a ontage on Washington of 122 et with a depth of 150 feet along ighth street to an alley, is owned Mrs. Isabel Mauran.

These leases are considered oteworthy examples of faith in e future of Washington avenue a retail center. Washington venue is expected to derive no mall benefit from the improve ents to be made by the Illinois erminal Co., formerly known as e McKinley System, at Twelfth nd Washington. Another contri ution to the retail importance of his thoroughfare is seen in the roposed opening of the upper eck of the Eads Bridge as a free ighway for vehicular and pedes ian traffic.

Martin & Breitt also leased quar ers at 505 North Twelfth to Bel nap & Brooks and a store at 509 North Twelfth to G. A. Kuntz for restaurant.

Sale of the recently completed Loop building on Enright avenue, extending from Syracuse street to Kingsland avenue in University City for $150,000, is reported. The purchaser is said to be a client of the Weinberg Construction Co. The building, a two-story struc ture, contains 13 stores and 23 studio apartments. It occupies a lot with a frontage of 100 feet on Enright, 100 feet on Syracuse and 100 feet on Kingsland. Garavelli Resale Pending.

Negotiations are said to be progressing for the resale of the Balson block at the northeast corner of Delmar boulevard and Hamilton avenue, purchased recently by Joe Garavelli for $170,000 through the Mississippi Valley Merchants State Trust Co., as told exclusively in last Sunday's Post-Dispatch. It is understood Garavelli has declined a profit of $10,000 on his investment. This property was owned by the heirs of the late W. L. Balson.

Apparently the Garavelli purchase has precipitated demand for property on Delmar both east and

REAL ESTATE CLASSIFIED ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH ADVERTISING FOR SALES

PART EIGHT. ST. LOUIS, SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 12, 1930. PAGES 1—12

6-STORY STORE AGAIN LEASED BY SONNENFELD'S

Contract Calls for $35,000 Annually for 25 Years, or 5 Pct. on $700,000 Valuation.

$250,000 SALE ON ENRIGHT REPORTED

Number of Offers Reported for Delmar Property — Resale of Garavelli Corner Pending.

By Berry Moore.

Sonnenfeld's, dealers in women's ready-to-wear apparel, has renewed the lease of its quarters comprising the entire six-story building at 610 Washington avenue, the rental provisions of which give the property a record valuation.

The lease, which is for a term of 25 years, calls for annual net rental of $35,000, or a total of $875,000 for the entire term. This is at the rate of 5 per cent on valuation of $700,000, or $14,583 a foot for the Washington avenue frontage of the property. The negotiations were handled by Martin & Breitt.

The property has a frontage on Washington avenue of 48 feet, with a depth extending through to St. Charles street. The second frontage on St. Charles street greatly enhances the value of the property, which doubtless the negotiations took into consideration. Both the building and the ground are owned by Edward Nugent and Byron Nugent Jr.

Other Washington Avenue Leases.

The Weil Clothing Co. only recently purchased the 99-year lease held by the Lindell Real Estate Co. of the eight-story building at the northwest corner of Washington avenue and Eighth street, which the clothing company has occupied for more than 20 years. The fee to this property which has a frontage on Washington of 122 feet with a depth of 150 feet along Eighth street to an alley, is owned by Mrs. Isabel Mauran.

These leases are considered noteworthy examples of faith in the future of Washington avenue as a retail center. Washington avenue is expected to derive no small benefit from the improvements to be made by the Illinois Terminal Co., formerly known as the McKinley System, at Twelfth and Washington. Another contribution to the retail importance of this thoroughfare is seen in the proposed opening of the upper deck of the Eads Bridge as a free highway for vehicular and pedestrian traffic.

Julius Glazer Lease.

Julius Glazer & Co. have acquired a long lease of the fifth floor of the building at the southwest corner of Seventeenth street and Washington avenue through Martin & Breitt. This concern handles threads and linens and kindred merchandise. Martin & Breitt also report having negotiated a lease of a store at the northwest corner of Twelfth street and Washington avenue to Samuel L. Friedman for women's coats, suits and dresses. The Goodbar-Lloyd Hat Co. has taken a lease of the third floor of the building at the northwest corner of Twelfth boulevard and Washington avenue, through Martin & Breitt. The first floor of the building, 714-16 Washington avenue, has been leased by Martin & Breitt to the Majestic Garment Co.

Martin & Breitt also leased quarters at 505 North Twelfth to Belknap & Brooks and a store at 509 North Twelfth to G. A. Kuntz for a restaurant.

Sale of the recently completed Loop building on Enright avenue, extending from Syracuse street to Kingsland avenue in University City for $150,000, is reported. The purchaser is said to be a client of the Weinberg Construction Co. The building, a two-story structure, contains 13 stores and 23 studio apartments. It occupies a lot with a frontage of 190 feet on Enright, 100 feet on Syracuse and 100 feet on Kingsland. It was owned by the Marshal Investment Co., which it is understood, was paid a generous profit on its investment.

Garavelli Resale Pending.

Negotiations are said to be progressing for the resale of the Balson block at the northeast corner of Delmar boulevard and Hamilton avenue, purchased recently by Joe Garavelli for $170,000 through the Mississippi Valley Merchants State Trust Co., as told exclusively in last Sunday's Post-Dispatch. It is understood Garavelli has declined a profit of $10,000 on his investment. This property was owned by the heirs of the late W. L. Balson.

Apparently the Garavelli purchase has precipitated demand for property on Delmar both east and west of Hamilton avenue. Offers were reported for the William Keane tract at the southeast corner of Delmar and Hodiamont avenue, overlooking the Wabash viaduct and opposite the new Wabash passenger station. Several offers weer reported for the vacant property on the north side of Delmar boulevard, just east of and adjoining the corner of Skinker, listed with Elmore Cave & Co.

Extension of Skinker avenue north to Olive street road has enhanced the value of property on both Skinker and Delmar in this locality, according to real estate men.

PROPERTY AT 12TH AND LOCUST SOLD

Final papers have been passed in the sale of the property at 408-10 North Twelfth boulevard, with a frontage of 27 feet, to the Arlington Investment Co. The purchase is just north of and adjoins the property of the Essex Investment Co. at the northeast corner of Twelfth and Locust streets. Plans contemplate combining the two properties which have a total frontage of 110 feet on Twelfth and 100 feet on Locust, bounded on the east by a 20-foot alley.

A hotel company, operating 30 hotels throughout the country, it was stated has two holdings under consideration for a 400-room hotel.

Negotiations in the sale of the 27 feet to the Arlington Investment Co. were handled by the Holbrook Blackwelder & Co and Sam Hamburg Jr.

EXPLAINS CITY'S PLAN TO ABOLISH CROSSINGS

Kinsey Tells Why Work in West End Is Not Done at One Time.

Reasons why the city does not plan to carry out all the West End grade separation plans at one time, or within one year, are stated in a letter President Kinsey of the Board of Public Service has sent to property owners who signed a recent petition. The petition urged that the Wabash crossings between Union and Delmar boulevards be eliminated while the Delmar-Union viaduct work is going on.

"In the first place," he says, "the plan is to separate all the grades as rapidly as practicable, and we are assured that the Wabash Railroad Co. will co-operate fully in carrying out this plan.

"Obviously we should not tear up all the crossings at the same time and thus paralyze traffic in that entire section. The chief question relates to the order in which the various steps should be taken.

"It must be remembered that the railroad tracks may not be put into a depression subject to flooding by the River des Peres. The depression of the tracks must follow the completion of the River des Peres sewer.

"The River des Peres sewer will not be completed to Delmar boulevard for a year, whereas it is now finished at Union boulevard, where it is now ready and affords complete drainage for depressed tracks in that vicinity.

"Why wait an entire year before we start anything? The common sense thing is to start now on the work that can be done now and follow as rapidly as possible with succeeding steps.

"The petition states: 'We submit that the City of St. Louis should request the Public Service Commission to order all of these railroad crossings between Union avenue and the Delmar viaduct eliminated at the same time, so that the use of the public streets in this vicinity will only be closed for once to allow this great work to go forward to completion.'

"Would it be wise to close all these streets at the same time? Would it be wise even to close Union and DeBaliviere at the same time?

"The Wabash has agreed to cooperate with the city to eliminate all these grade crossings in sequence as rapidly as is practicable. That is the plan, and I guess that is exactly what you think should be done. The engineering and legal details may well be left to city officials who have pressed for a solution of this problem, and who are as anxious for completion as anyone could be.

"The two railroads have agreed with the city on the separation at Union and Lindell. That work will be pressed forward during the coming year, and at the same time that the River des Peres work north of Lindell boulevard is paving the way for further track depression. Simultaneously details will be completed for the successive steps so that there may be no lost time as the work progresses.

'This program will bring about final completion of the entire project at least one year earlier than by any other plan.'

Construction Contracts in 1929 Fall 13 Per Cent in 37 States

December Projects in Central West Show Increase Over Preceding Month, F. W. Dodge Report Says.

Construction contracts recorded during 1929 in 37 Eastern states reached a total of $5,754,290,500, according to F. W. Dodge Corporation. Compared with the total for the record year 1928, this was a decrease of 13 per cent. Commercial and industrial building reached a combined total of $1,689,200,800 last year, an increase of 11 per cent over 1928; these classes of work usually increase when general business activity and the stock market area are on the upswing; public and institutional buildings of all kinds (constituting the rest of the non-residential classes) amounted to $901,020,200 last year, representing an eight per cent decrease from 1928. Non-residential building as a whole had contract expenditures just 3½ per cent above those of 1928.

The decline was most severe in residential building, whose 1929 total was $1,915,727,500, being 31 per cent under the 1928 total. Even public works and utilities, contracts for which kept somewhat ahead of 1928 very nearly to the end of the year, finished with a contract total seven per cent under that of 1928, or $1,248,342,000 as compared with $1,337,930,500.

Although the financial upheaval which reached its climax in late October was in the nature of a removal of serious obstacles to construction improvement, it came too late to aid any improvement in the 1929 construction record. December contracts amounted to only $316,368,100, which was 27 per cent under the total for December, 1929, and 19 per cent under November, 1929. The month's record included: $114,049,800, or 36 per cent of all construction, for residential buildings; $67,392,400, or 21 per cent, for industrial projects; $51,821,300, or 16 per cent, for public works and utilities; $33,392,100, or 11 per cent, for commercial buildings; and $19,841,800, or 6 per cent, for educational buildings.

A much more promising showing was made in the December record of contemplated projects. New plans reported during the month amounted to $864,220,600, an increase of 19 per cent over the amount reported in December, 1928, and a 20 per cent increase over November, 1929. The total of contemplated new work reported in the entire year was $8,886,017,500. This was 54 per cent in excess of the amount of contracts, a good indication that the year closes with a considerable volume of unsatisfied construction demand.

December construction contracts awarded in the Central West (Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin, Southern Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska) show a substantial increase over November but a decrease from the preceding December. Last month's total, $97,352,700, in amount, was 13 per cent greater than November, 1929, record, but was off 19 per cent when compared with the corresponding month of 1928.

The major items in the December construction record were the following: $64,237,800, or 66 per cent of all construction, for residential buildings; $47,279,700, or 49 per cent, for industrial plants; $16,601,800, or 17 per cent, for public works and utilities, and $6,104,600, or 6 per cent, for commercial buildings.

Last month's contract total brought the amount of new construction work started in the Central West during 1929 up to $1,681,835,800, compared with $1,934,774,900 for 1928, a decrease of 15 per cent.

New contemplated projects reported in December reached a total of $249,768,700 representing rated increases of 48 per cent over November and 16 per cent over the December, 1928, total.

WESTERN STATES LIFE CO. SURPLUS REDUCED TO $31,000

Three Funds Set Aside Total $17,400, Asa B. Wallace Explains in Report.

The surplus of the Western States Life Assurance Co. has been reduced to $31,000 by the setting aside of $17,400 in three funds, it was shown yesterday in a financial report submitted at the annual stockholders' meeting by Asa B. Wallace, president.

Financial difficulties of the company have been attributed by Wallace to his predecessor, the late Frank J. Falzone, who founded the company. Joseph A. Falzone, a director and son of the founder, has blamed Wallace. A reserve of $6400 has been set aside to cover mortgages which have been declared excessive in view of the value of the property; $7500 was placed in a fund for contesting and paying claims against the company, and $3500 was withdrawn to constitute a reserve to cover stock sales shown on the books but for which no money is shown to have been paid.

Wallace announced that he would not be a candidate for reelection at a directors' meeting Tuesday.

STALIN OUSTS WOMEN WHO ONCE LED REDS

Clara Zetkin and Ruth Fischer, Veteran Workers Are Now Discarded.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—The general house cleaning which the undisputed boss of the Communist movement, Joseph Stalin, started more than a year ago has thrown into the discard two of the most picturesque figures in the German radical movement—venerable Clara Zetkin and redoubtable Ruth Fischer.

Had it not been for her advanced age and infirmity, Clara Zetkin would have shared the fate of Leon Trotzky, Christian Rakovsky, Gregor Zinovieff, and other fallen gods of the Communist movement. In fact, the inner councils had actually decided upon Clara Zetkin's expulsion.

Listening around among the rank and file of the membership, however, the party bosses found that the bosom friend of Rosa Luxembourg and Karl Liebknecht was venerated in Germany much as Nikolai Lenin is venerated in Soviet Russia. Had Clara Zetkin been physically able to continue to play a role, Stalin's followers would not have hesitated to read her out of the party even in the face of this popularity with the masses.

Invalid, Almost Blind.

But the aged revolutionist, now 72 years old, is an invalid. She is almost blind. Her asthma prevents her from delivering public speeches. She lives in Birkenwerder, a quiet, residential suburb of Berlin, where she passes almost unnoticed.

More from force of habit than because she has any active work to do, she comes to the Reichstag once every few weeks — a rather pathetic figure as she hobbles along, supported on one side by a younger woman, leaning on the other side on a heavy walking stick.

So the Communist procession marches on without her. As one party leader put it, "Her ideology is now quite bourgeois, but as she's so old we've decided not to bother to discipline her."

Ruth Fischer's Work Ignored.

Ruth Fischer, too, incurred the disfavor of Stalin. Forgotten were her services in practically winning the post-war Spartacists over to Moscow when they were wavering between allying themselves with the Independent Socialists or the communists. Forgotten were her fiery speeches as floor leader in the Reichstag, where a full house was always assured when she was slated to address the solons.

Because she dared oppose Stalin as not revolutionary enough, she was promptly deposed. She struggled to the last, made repeated trips to Moscow to fight her case, but was ultimately ousted from the party.

For a while she tried to rally an opposition group about her. Then she grew weary of the combat, and disappeared from the political arena entirely. One now finds her working daily in the industrial borough of Britz, adjacent to Neukoelln, the scene of last Mayday's Communist uprising.

She has a job as visiting nurse, and one can see her climbing rickety stairs and investigating impoverished homes, bringing such cheer as the city's limited finances will permit. As she is a woman of indefatigable good humor, the families on her visiting list are happy at her appearance.

Some day, however, Ruth Fischer intends to return to politics. In fact, she is already trying to make her peace with Stalin. She knows from the fate of Karl Radek that the first thing one must do to be readmitted to grace is to be absolutely "good" in the Stalin sense. So she supports the party through thick and thin, even though she is no longer a member, and takes care to let Moscow know that she is doing so.

TABLET TO JOHN M. MALANG UNVEILED AT STATE CAPITOL

Roy Britton Presides at Ceremony and Number of Officials Speak.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Jan. 11.—A memorial tablet placed in the Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial Hall of the State Capitol as a tribute to the late John M. Malang of Joplin, former State Senator and good roads pioneer, who is credited with being the originator of the State highway system in Missouri, was unveiled here this afternoon.

Malang, who was active for many years in good roads movements in Missouri, died in Kansas City on Sept. 13, 1928, two days after he had obtained indorsements by both the Republican and Democratic State platform conventions for an additional State road bond issue to complete the present State highway system.

The memorial tablet was installed by the John Malang Memorial Association, of which Howard C. Murphy of Joplin is chairman. Roy F. Britton of St. Louis, president of the Automobile Club of Missouri, presided.

Brief addresses were made by Lieutenant-Governor E. H. Winter, Secretary of State Charles U. Becker, C. D. Mathews, chairman of the State Highway Commission; State Senator A. L. McCawley, A. L. Murphy of Louisiana, A. W. Graham of Kansas City, former chief State highway engineer; E. A. Duensing of Concordia, Oak Hunter of Moberly, former speaker of the House of Representatives, and Hugh Stephens of Jefferson City, former vice chairman of the State Highway Commission.

FINANCING OF HOMES IN WHICH OWNER LIVES

Plenty of Money Available for the Purpose, N. S. Wood Declares.

N. S. Wood, president of N. S. Wood, Inc., says there is now and has been throughout 1929, plenty of money to loan for the financing of moderate-priced homes and single flats in which the owner lives.

"Financing of this class of property can be arranged on easy terms," Wood declares, "in most instances the borrower repaying a stated monthly amount for a stated period. Such loans are and will continue to be available at the prevailing rates of the last few years, as there is still plenty of 5½ and 6 per cent money.

"However, the speculative builder will not be able to borrow as near to the total cost of building as heretofore, nor on as good terms as the owner-occupant.

"A condition to which the lender is now giving much more consideration is the possibility of special taxes being assessed against the property securing a loan, as, in some instances, a supposedly good loan has been rendered doubtful by special tax assessments."

ALLEGED BUCKET SHOP CLOSED BY INJUNCTION

New York Firm Said to Have Had "Sucker List" of 400,000.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11. — A temporary injunction, restraining Robin Fowler & Co., cotton securities brokers with offices at 67 Wall street, from engaging in further business was obtained in Supreme Court yesterday by Matthew Tiffany, Deputy State Attorney-General. Tiffany charges the firm, which has customers throughout the South, is a bucket shop. He asserted the "sucker list," showed about 400,000 names. Members of the firm are Robin M. Fowler and Mrs. Emma Herd. No estimate of losses suffered by customers of the firm has been made, Tiffany said.

At the hearing Fowler admitted that his firm had no assets and that he would be unable to pay customers. A hearing on a motion for a permanent injunction will be held next Friday.

MAWSON'S ANTARCTIC PARTY SEES MOUNTAINS FROM SHIP

Arrangements Made for Airplane Reconnaissance; Evening Mirage Improves Visibility.

By SIR DOUGLAS MAWSON
(Copyright, 1930)

S. S. DISCOVERY, Jan. 4 (Delayed).—Today we arrived in a region of irregular shallow soundings in the ice pack, indicating the proximity of land, but further progress was limited, owing to a strong southeast wind, coping with which the ship maneuvered all day in slack water amidst the ice pack. Early today, the tips of two mountain peaks were seen to the southward, protruding from the rising land of the ice slopes. By evening, the wind had somewhat diminished and our vision was much clearer. At the present moment, owing to the clearing of the atmosphere and the evening mirage which is a regular phenomenon along the antarctic continent, our view of the land is greatly improved. From the crow's nest atop the main mast, the view is one wide sweep of continental ice slopes, out of which more than a dozen rocky peaks are rising up. We are making arrangements for airplane reconnaisance tomorrow.

BOARD TO HEAR DR. COOK'S APPLICATION FOR PAROLE

Session Begins at Leavenworth Today—Explorer Has Served Nearly Six Years.

By the Associated Press.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., Jan. 11.—The application of Dr. Frederick A. Cook, Arctic explorer and oil promoter, for a release from the Federal Penitentiary here will come before the Prison Parole Board which convenes tomorrow.

Dr. Cook's case is among 1200 others to be considered. Indications have been given recently that there is no opposition to the granting of a parole to Dr. Cook, who entered the penitentiary April 6, 1925.

Dr. Cook has become eligible for a parole hearing, having served the minimum time required of his sentence of 14 years and nine months imposed at Fort Worth, Tex., by Federal Judge Killits of Ohio in 1923, for using the mails to defraud in his oil promotions.

Federal Judge Wilson of Fort Worth, who has contended Cook's sentence was too severe, attempted to free him 18 months ago on a probation order, but higher Federal courts held that a Judge could not grant probation after service of the sentence had begun.

REHEARING IS DENIED ON MINESOTA PRESS GAG LAW

State Supreme Court Stands by Its Decision Upholding Right to Suppress Newspaper.

By the Associated Press.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 11.—A rehearing on the question of the constitutionality of the Minnesota Newspaper Suppresssion Act, which twice has been upheld by the Minnesota supereme court, was denied by that court today.

The rehearing wa srequested on the grounds that additional evidence, bearing on the constitutionality of the act, had been uncovered.

The supreme court first held the law constitutional, by affirming an opinion of the Hennepin County (Minneapolis), district court which issued a temporary order suspending publication of the Saturday Press, of Minneapolis. The district court later made the order permanent. Another appeal was taken, the supreme court again affirming the constitutionality of the act. The newspaper, a weekly, was suppressed for alleged defamatory remarks.

JOHN M. ROBERTSON HEADS IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION

He Urges Action on River Front Work as Recommended by Plan Commission.

John M. Robertson, office building executive, was elected president of the City Improvement Association at a meeting in the organization's headquarters in the Planters Building yesterday. Other officers for this year are Will F. Shannon, first vice president; Lou J. Conant, executive vice president; W. J. Brennan, treasurer, and T. M. Wall, secretary.

In a prepared statement Robertson voiced approval of street widening projects now being pushed by the city and called attention to the need for more liberal condemnation laws, citing the delays in the Market and Morgan street widenings as examples of the restrictions imposed by the City Charter and State Constitution.

The statement urged action in the river front improvement, as projected in specifications of the City Plan Commission. The association comprises property owners in the district bounded by Clark and Washington avenues, Eighth street and the Mississippi River.

An hour later, Harry Smith, butcher in a chain grocery at 2533 Woodson road, Overland, was robbed of $35, apparently by the same man.

U. S. Minister to China Sails.

THINKS WORLD WILL BE AT PEACE IN 100 YEARS

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt Says London Conference Will Be Step Forward.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, who is here to preside at the Conference for the Cause and Cure of War, which opens Jan. 14, thinks it will be 100 years before peace for the entire world is attained. She said the naval reduction conference in London, however, is the cross roads in the present search and thinks some progress will result.

When suffrage, to which she devoted 50 years of effort, was attained Mrs. Catt turned her attention to the peace movement. When asked what she would tackle when peace was assured, Mrs. Catt made the 100-year prediction.

The popular general interest and demand for information about the naval reduction conference is a most hopeful sign, she said. The press, she thinks, has been a potent agency in bringing about this open and above-board policy. Women, in the opinion of this veteran leader, are soon due to furnish a surprise to men by the way they vote.

How Men Regard Women.

"Men have been measuring the feminine voting population by their own yard stick," said Mrs. Catt. "They think they know just how the women will cast their ballot at every election. Some day their calculations will be completely upset. Women are just getting into their stride and realising what they want and before long their vote will show it."

Asked if she thought women of this country had taken full advantage of their voting opportunities, she answered:

"At least I am not satisfied. I did not look for a revolution overnight. Two things have held the women voters back. One is the lack of cordial welcome from either of the political parties. The other is the evident shock experienced by men whenever a woman has aspired to an important position. However, this will all adjust itself."

Mrs. Catt has worked out a plan to keep women from talking vaguely and without point when they feel they must be heard in public meetings.

Denied Chance to Talk.

At the last conference on the cause and cure of war, many women complained afterward that they did not get a chance to talk. "Fine!" replied Mrs. Catt. "I'll give you a chance at the next conference—provided you have something worth while to say."

Now such a sifting system has been worked out by this woman that the women must work off any vague and hazy oratory on a round table before it can get to the general floor of the conference.

If the round table decides that what the woman has to say is worth hearing it stands a chance of getting before the convention.

And the woman is satisfied because she "had her say."

COURT REBUKES LAWYER FOR REMARK ON P. S. PROFITS

Says Earnings Are Not at Issue in Damage Case, Which Is Won by Street Car Co.

A rebuke was administered by Circuit Judge Ryan yesterday to Attorney Burt A. Kaemmerer for stating in the trial of a damage suit against the St. Louis Public Service Co. that the traction company was taking a profit of $1,000,000 from the people, while trying to avoid paying his client's claim. The remark was made by the attorney in addressing the jury in the case.

Judge Ryan pounded on the bench and told the lawyer to cease. "That is highly improper," declared the Court. "We are not concerned in this case whether the defendant makes $1,000,000 or $10,000,000 or does not make a cent."

Vance Higgs, representing the company, askd the court to discharge the jury and declare a mistrial for the alleged prejudicial remark, but the Court in denying the motion instructed the jury that the question of profits was not at issue.

Kaemmerer then made an apology, to which the Court answered it was nothing more than he owed. The jury found in favor of the company, the suit involving a personal injury claim for $10,000 filed by Mrs. Georgia Simmons.

PETITION TO NAVE CYTRON CO. FOUNDERS MADE CO-RECEIVERS

However, Judge Davis Has Said He Would Not Appoint More Than One.

A petition asking the Federal Court to appoint Gustave Cytron as co-receiver of the Cytron Mortgage Co., of which he is president and founder, is being circulated among holders of second mortgage bonds issued by the company.

J. M. Feigenbaum, attorney, in the Arcade Building, chairman of the Bondholders' Committee, issued a statement yesterday to the effect that his group disapproved of such an appointment, and Federal Judge Davis, who appointed M. H. Rodemyer as receiver recently, said he would not sanction more than one receiver. It was not known how many signatures had been obtained for the petition.

THE ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

first in Advertising and St. Louis Circulation again in 1929 as usual

The Post-Dispatch, year after year, carries a far greater volume of paid advertising than any other St. Louis newspaper.

In all the history of St. Louis newspapers no other St. Louis newspaper—not even the second and third combined—has ever carried as much advertising as the Post-Dispatch carried in 1929.

Profits from the advertisers' dollar are not measured in terms of rates, but in results—increased sales at reduced sales costs.

Because the concentration of advertising in the Post-Dispatch brings to advertisers the most profitable results this newspaper continues to be the first in advertising in St. Louis.

ARMKNECHT—In memory of my dear mother, Anna Armknecht, who departed this life four years ago, Jan. 11, 1926:

Remembrance is a golden chain,
Death tries to break but all in vain;

When we were all together.

SALESMEN WANTED

SALESMANAGERS.

Several men over 30 and under 50 who have been in the money and find it necessary to get into some other line of business. Qualifications to get into our national organization; you must be a salesman—not an order-taker; you must own a fair looking car and have unquestionable references. That is your side. Our side. We sell a product that fully 90 per cent of your prospects will tell you is the best they ever saw, and we pay you commission a few days after you secure the order, average commission about $30 per order. Good men average more than an order per day, and we do not ask you to collect any down payment. Two hours of soliciting by one man secured eight prospects of whom three were sold the same day. Come in and we will show you the orders. We will only talk to men who have business written all over them. Our company is just eight years old, and the largest of its kind in the country. We promote our men as soon as they show us that they have executive ability. Our business is easy to learn, a little common sense is all that is necessary. If you think you have the qualifications necessary to step into this fast company, call Monday at 9 to 2 and interview Mr. Trepel at 4545 De Tonty street. Out-of-town applicants residing south of Springfield, Ill., and anywhere in the States of Missouri and Arkansas write. We need a number of territorial managers in the district mentioned. (c)

Rumor Bulgar King Will Marry Revived

Call of Boris on Pope Renews Stories He Is Trying to Get Consent, Hitherto Refused, to His Wedding to Italian Princess.

By the Associated Press.

ROME, Jan. 11.—Boris III, King of Bulgaria, had an audience with Pope Pius XI this evening and thereby revived rumors of the possibility of his marriage with Princess Giovanna, daughter of the Italian King.

It was stated the greatest difficulty in the way of such a match was the difference in religion. It has been impossible so far to induce the Pontiff to grant the necessary dispensation for the 22-year-old Italian Princess to marry the King, who by the Constitution of Bulgaria, must belong to the Orthodox Greek Church, without a written promise that she would remain a Roman Catholic and that their children would be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith.

A solution which persons outside the Roman Catholic Church have considered the most probable is that the Princess retain her religion and bring up all her children as Roman Catholics except her first-born son, who would be reared in the Greek Orthodox religion in order to succeed Boris on the Bulgarian throne.

Boris was born and baptized a Roman Catholic. His mother, the first wife of King Ferdinand, was Princess Marie Louise of Bourbon Parma, a Catholic house. She was born in Rome and was baptized by Pope Pius IX.

Ferdinand, wishing to have a greater hold on the Bulgarian people, decided that the baby Boris must leave the Catholic Church and wrote to Pope Leo XIII for his consent. The Pope refused and rebuked Ferdinand for even suggesting the change. Nevertheless, shortly afterward Boris, who was then only two years of age, entered the Orthodox Greek Church. The Bulgarian constitution which originally permitted the sovereign to accept any religious faith was changed by Ferdinand to make it compulsory that the King to be of the Orthodox Greek faith.

King Boris will be 36 years old on Jan. 30. The two elder sisters of Giovanna have been married for several years and her brother the Crown Prince, who is about three years her senior, has just married Princess Marie Jose of Belgium. The youngest daughter of the Italian sovereigns, Princess Marie, is only 16 years of age.

NAMES 'KING OF KINGS' OF COTTON MANIPULATORS

Merchant Tells Senate Subcommittee Huge Manipulative Straddles Caused Depression.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—T. Ralph Jones of Norfolk, Va., cotton merchant, told a Senate agricultural subcommittee investigating the cotton exchanges today that Southern deliveries, in effect since October, and huge manipulative straddles were responsible for the present depressed market for cotton.

Resuming an inquiry begun before the Chirstmas recess under a resolution by Senator Heflin (Dem.), Alabama, the subcommittee heard Jones assert that only one of the previous witnesses had given the real reasons for the decline, and that he was Edward S. Butler, former president of the New Orleans exchange.

Jones referred to testimony of W. L. Clayton of Anderson, Clayton & Co., Houston, Tex., cotton firm, whose name had figured in many discussions of the situation.

"It doesn't stand to reason," he said, "that Clayton would give the real reasons because he is the king of all kings of the manipulators."

In his testimony, Clayton denied his firm had exerted an undue influence on the market.

Remarking that he wanted to call the attention of the Department of Justice to the question, Heflin asked whether, by reason of the Houston firm's tremendous financial ability and large stock, it might prevent legitimate speculation, injure business and operate in restraint of trade in violation of the antitrust law.

"I firmly believe that's true," Jones answered. Congress, he continued, could correct the situation by legislation.

From the beginning, Jones told the subcommittee, he was afraid Southern deliveries would have a bad effect because he knew Clayton was in favor of them.

Jones read a letter circulated by the Cotton Market Forecast Co. of New York and said it contained the best summary of the situation he had seen. The letter said that speculation was "what chiefly ails the cotton market," with one small group of men dominating and dictating speculative maneuvers.

HOUSE VOTES DOWN MORE MONEY FOR SCOTT FIELD

Rejects Proposal to Increase Army Lighter-Than-Air Fund From $75,450 to $278,450.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Voting on an amendment by Representative Ed M. Irwin (Rep.), Illinois, the House today, by a division of 64 to 29, defeated a proposal to increase the appropriation for lighter-than-air equipment in the army supply bill from $75,450 to $278,450. As most of the army lighter-than-air craft activities are conducted at Scott Field, Ill., an increase in appropriations would enlarge operations there.

Members of the House Appropriations Committee opposed the increase, stating that $78,450 was all the Budget Bureau had recommended for this item. Irwin replied that he had consulted War Department officials who had stated that the larger appropriation could be effectively spent for needed equipment.

Representative John J. Cochran (Dem.), St. Louis, pointed out that the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary in charge of aeronautics had advocated in their annual reports that the lighter-than air activities should be continued. He said that the $78,450 would provide only one small non-rigid airship, four balloons and certain necessary accessories.

Senators Deneen and Glenn (Rep.), Illinois, have announced that they will seek to have the appropriation increased.

INQUIRY INTO ROW IN POWER COMMISSION

Congressmen Investigate Contest Between Solicitor and Secretary.

By RAYMOND P. BRANDT,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Two Congressional Committees have taken steps to investigate the bitter contest now raging in the Federal Power Commission between the Executive Secretary Frank E. Bonner, and Solicitor Charles A. Russell, which has brought the accounting work of the Commission to a virtual standstill.

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee of which Senator Couzens of Michigan is chairman, today announced that it had called upon the Secretaries of War, Interior and Agriculture, who constitute the Federal Power Commission, to send to the committee all correspondence and memoranda they have received from Bonner, Russell, Chief Accountant William V. King, and the Commission's former general counsel, Thad H. Brown of Ohio, now counsel for the Radio Commission. The Committee also authorized Chairman Couzens to call for all correspondence and memoranda, Secretary Bonner has received from other division heads in the Commission.

Memoranda was called for, it was learned, because the conflict in the Commission has become so intense that Russell and King have refused to communicate with the commissioners through Bonner's office, the usual procedure before Bonner became secretary.

Nye Voices Suspicions.

Snator Nye (Rep.), North Dakota, who is not a member of the Committee declared examination of these papers would show "the power trust had grabbed the machinery set up by the Federal Governmetn to regulate hydro-electric power licenses, using it to its own advantage."

"There isn't any doubt in my mind," he continued, "but that certain of the personnel connected with the commission is part and parcel of the voice of the power trust itself.

"Secretary Bonner has attempted to nullify Solicitor Russell's opinion that only actual, legitimate expenditures on licensed power projects shall be approved by the commission. Russell and King are in agreement that the law makes such a yard-stick of valuation mandatory."

Chairman Couzens said that the committee desired the commission's memoranda before proceeding with the power regulation feature of his bill to establish a new Power and Communications Commission. He would not comment on what committee expected to learn from the papers. Nye, who is a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, promised that whatever the Couzens Committee failed to uncover in the Power Commission, his committee would investigate.

The other Congressional Committee that will look into the power commission room, is the House Subcommittee on Appropriations for Independent Offices, of which Representative E. H. Wason (Rep.), New Hampshire is chairman.

Bonner Closely Questioned.

Secretary Bonner appeared before this committee Thursday and was so closely questioned by Representative John C. Allen (Rep.), Illinois that Representative C. A. Woodrum (Dem.), Virginia, asked that Monday be set aside by the committee to hear Bonner, Russell and King. Woodrum said that he would ask the three division heads to bring with them all memoranda that had passed between them and members of the commission, particularly memorandum on personnel and appropriations.

It has been an open secret among Federal Power Commission officials and employes that Bonner and Russell have been at loggerheads since their appointment last July 1.

Before coming to the Power Commission, Russell was for years in the legal division of the Interstate Commerce Commission in charge of accounting work. He was indorsed by several commerce commissioners for his present position.

Bonner was in the engineering division, of the Federal Forestry Service in California before coming to Washington. He was recommended for his present post by O. C. Merrill, formerly executive secretary who resigned to take position with the American Committee of the World Power Conference, which is financed by the large electric power companies and New York banks.

King, the chief accountant, has been with the commission since its establishment in 1921. Before that he was in the Interstate Commerce Commission, where he was associated with Justice Brandeis in the 5 per cent rate cases.

Two Run Against Norris.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 11.—Senator George W. Norris today filed as the third candidate for the United States Senate in the Republican primaries. State Treasurer W. M. Stebbins and Lieutenant-Governor George Williams filed previously. While Norris was in Nebraska recently, objections to his appearance on the regular Republican ticket were voiced. No actual protests have reached Secretary of State Marsh, however, and on the Norris application today he made a pencil notation, "o. k., Frank Marsh."

STREET CAR MEN'S UNION SUES OVER INSURANCE CANCELLATION

Officers Seek Payment of $11,577 Benefits Alleged to Be Due Members.

A suit growing out of cancellation of a contract to furnish accident and sick benefit insurance to members of the local Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America was filed in Circuit Court yesterday by Murray J. Douglas and L. A. Graeser, president and secretary, respectively, of the union. The suit is directed against the Union Labor Insurance Agency, which made an agreement last March to carry the insurance, and the Southern Surety Co. of New York, which, it is alleged, made a reinsurance agreement with the Union Insurance Agency.

The contract was terminated last October after a number of sick and accident benefits had been paid. It was said at the time the reason such action was taken was because the arrangement was not profitable.

Douglas and Graeser, as trustees for their organization, alleged that $11,577 in benefits is due members and they ask for judgment for that sum.

When the agreement was entered into with the labor insurance agency, Douglas and Graeser erroenously signed as officers of the labor insurance agency, while an officer of the agency erroneously signed for the employes' organization, the suit sets forth. However, future action in regard to the insurance, although the error was known, ratified the original intention of the makers of the contract and the agreement became binding, it is contended. The court is asked to reform the contract to correct the error, as well as to hold the Southern Surety Co. liable for outstanding claims.

Douglas and Graeser recently were defeated for re-election to their present offices, their terms expiring tomorrow night.

Troops on Duty at Trial.

By the Associated Press.

BOWLING GREEN, Ky., Jan. 11.—While National Guardsmen with rifles patroled the courtroom and a submachine gun covered proceedings, Elmer Grayson, 21 years old, one of three men accused of robbing the Bank of Oakland, Ky., and killing J. Robert Kirby, president of the Smith's Grove Bank, as they fled, was arraigned here today on charges of bank robbery and murder. Attorneys requested a change of venue. Judge N. P. Sims first overruled the motion and then consented to take it under advisement. Officers said Grayson confessed to participating in the bank robbery but said he did not shoot Kirby. Richard McNice and Ben Orville were the other two indicted.

Lytell Here With 'Brothers'

Former Movie Star, Back on the Boards, Brings His New Play to the American Tonight—Shubert Dark for Two Weeks, Will Have Ethel Barrymore on January 27 in Opposition to the Guild Theatre Production of "Marco Millions"—Casey Players in Second Week of "The Silent House" at Orpheum.

BERT LYTELL, who deserted the stage when the movies were young to become a star in the films, is back to his first love and comes to the American Theater tonight in the play "Brothers," a melodrama which was highly successful in New York and Chicago. The producer is none other than John Henry Mears, who, in addition to being a theatrical man also holds the record for the fastest trip around the world, achieved last year with the aid of an airplane.

The Shubert, after two weeks of musical comedy, is dark this week and will probably remain closed next week as well, its next booking being on Jan. 27 when Ethel Barrymore arrives, the same night, incidentally, on which the New York Theater Guild will present "Marco Millions" at the American. In between the latter house will have, following "Brothers," Ziegfeld's "Show Boat," which has already been done here, after a fashion, in motion pictures. "Show Boat" will move into the American, bag and baggage, a week from tomorrow night. Despite the size and popularity, of the Ziegfeld opus, it is scheduled to remain but six nights.

"BROTHERS" is a story of twin boys, orphaned in babyhood. One is adopted by a well-to-do family in the better part of town and is reared with all the advantages money can give. The other is left down in the slums with poor folks, and grows up on the city streets. The drama of the play centers in the meeting of the brothers, grown to manhood. A breath-taking situation develops, and is worked out in a way to set audiences discussing the old and still unsolved question as to just what it is that makes a man, after all—luxury, social background and culture, or just the character that comes from an intensive course in the school of experience.

Lytell, who became famous for his characterizations of gentlemanly crooks in the movies, will in "Brothers" play the dual role of both boys. He will be supported by a large cast including Grace Menken, Ben MacQuarrie, William Ingersoll, Clara Palmer, Frank Sylvester, James Seeley, Rosemary King, Matt Briggs, Ashley Cooper, Rita Carlyle, Lloyd Carleton, Gene Byram, Russell Rockwell, Irene Shirley, Alyce Dera, Eugene Williams, and Walter Shuttleworth.

"Brothers" is the first production which John Henry Mears has made since his exciting airplane dash around the world, in which he established a new record for speed in circumnavigating the globe. His pilot in his flight over Europe and Asia in the plane "City of New York," was Capt. C. B. Collyer, the aviator who was recently killed when his plane crashed against a canyon wall.

The author of "Brothers," Herbert Ashton Jr., is new to the theater as a playwright, although as an actor he has frequently been seen on the stage.

MEANWHILE, down at the Orpheum Theater, the Casey Players, go tonight, into the second and final week of the mystery meller, "The Silent House," a thriller which the stock company is presenting exceedingly well. Next Sunday night Mr. Casey will get more ambitious and will offer "The Royal Family," one of the most delightful comedies which came to St. Louis last season. The story, as many local theatergoers will recall, deals with the family of Cavendish, a family alive with stage stars and rich in the best traditions of the theater. Three generations are portrayed, but they are revealed at home and as decidedly human, rather than in the dressing room "in character." The grandmother, Fanny Cavendish, at 70 years of age, is planning her next season's tour to the Pacific Coast. Even the granddaughter, Gwen, 19, is to appear for the first time in her mother's company. Jealous of their high position in their profession, and loyal to one another in all trying circumstances, these Cavendishes form a remarkable group of people, colorful, turbulent, glamorous and exciting. They provide many a delicious and amusing moment for the audience.

Featured in "The Royal Family" will be Mary Hart, joint manager of the Arthur Casey Players. She will play the leading role of Julie Cavendish—a role said to represent Ethel Barrymore. Henrietta Crosman, a well known star, will be brought on to play Fanny, the part which she acted in the original company in New York and Howard Lang, star of "The Silent House," will be held over for the engagement for the part of Oscar Wolfe, the theatrical manager.

* * * *

EVERYTHING from Oriental dances, acrobatics and grand opera is included in the production of Ziegfeld's "Show Boat," to be seen in the American Theater Monday, Jan. 20. It is the musical play which Oscar Hammerstein II and Jerome Kern formed from the popular novel by Edna Ferber.

In the World's Fair scene, one of the dancers revives the Oriental dance numbers of the time; at the Trocadero, the Siddell Sisters do their ingenious acrobatic and Apache dances.

In contrast to these bizarre numbers, the Ziegfeld "glorified" girls present a series of dance numbers dating back to the old skirt dance and culminating with jazz eccentricities of today and Sammy White and Eva Puck will present Negro cakewalk.

The cast will include Charles Winninger, who is one of the foremost musical comedy comedians, Howard Marsh, Sammy White, Eva Puck, Irene Dunne, Jules Bledsoe, Margaret Carlisle, Edna May Oliver, Aunt Jemima and Jubilee Singers.

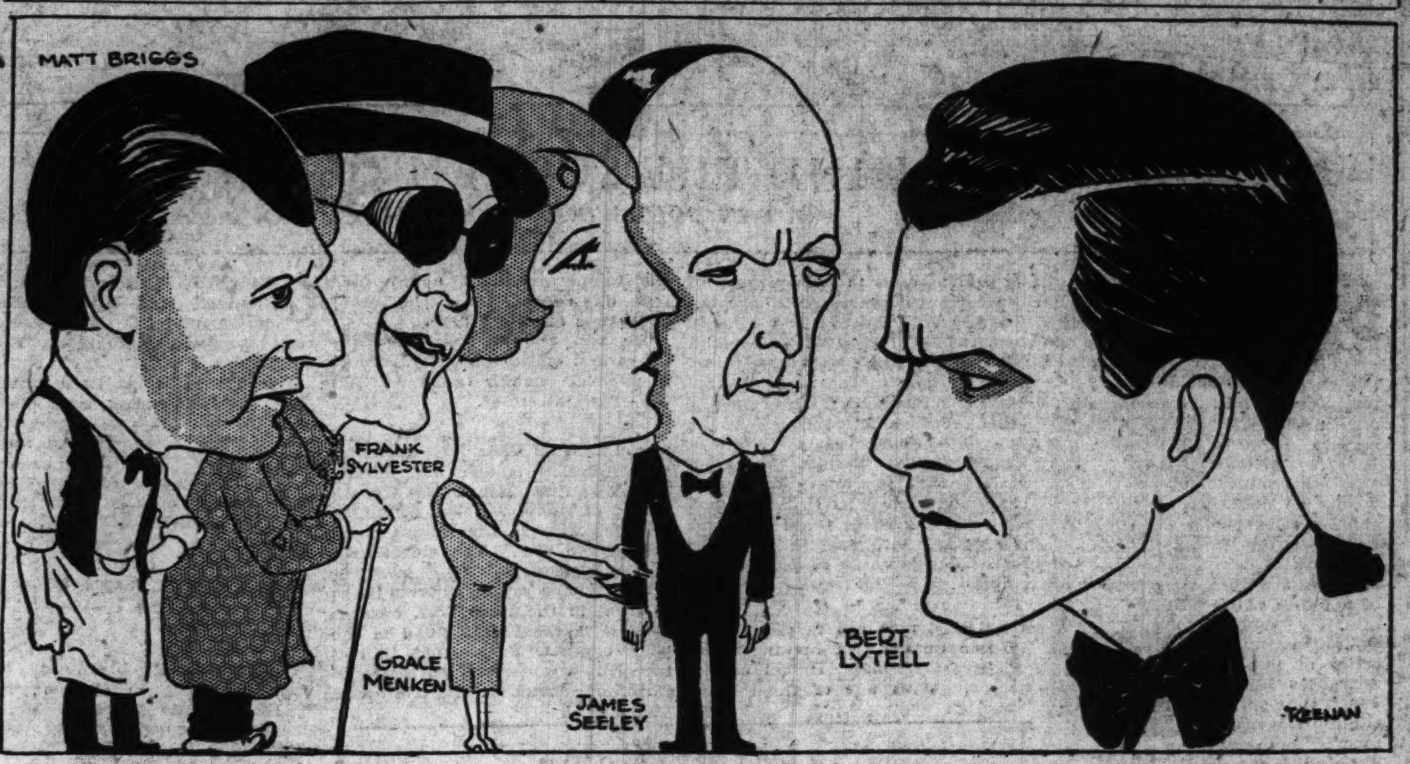
THE FOUR MARX BROTHERS in "Animal Crackers," will come to the Shubert Feb. 2. The book was written by George S. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind, who know their theater. The action is on Long Island, with the social climbers as a background. Among the large company of entertainers may be mentioned besides the Marx Brothers, Dorothy Fitz-Gibbon, Neil Collins, Margaret Dumont, Charles Baron, Margaret Irving, Louis Sorin, Arthur Lipson, Julian Winter, the Carsons, the Royal Filipino Band and the Markert Dancers.

* * * *

AT the American Theater the week of Jan. 27 the New York Theater Guild will present Eugene O'Neill's play, "Marco Millions." This is the fifth production of the first St. Louis subscription season. The production comes to the American with many principals of the New York cast. The play is a satire drenched in the opulence of the Orient. In this play one finds O'Neill painting the great explorer, Marco Polo, as an earlier Babbitt and a great romancer. Blind to beauty but alive to the sound of money, Marco is followed on his travels until the interest centers on his stay in Cathay, where, according to O'Neill, the granddaughter of the Kublai Kaan, the Princess Kukachin falls in love with him but finds him faithful to his Donata back in Venice.

O'Neill's Marco grows into a raging egoist, a prodigious juggler of the first person singular. This satire is developed in the three acts and 11 scenes of the play.

The Star and Four of the Cast of "Brothers" at the American Theater



AT THE NEW YORK PLAY

By Robert Littell

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.

DURING the past week Robert Emmet Sherwood treated us to something very different from the cheerful anachronism of his "Road to Rome," the kidding of Hollywood in his dramatization of Ring Lardner's story, "The Love Nest," and the Balkan burlesque of "The Queen's Husband." For his latest play, which is also his best, is a subdued, courageous and somewhat humdrum love story laid against the background of the London of 1917, during the blackest days of the World War.

Charles Dillingham produced "Waterloo Bridge," Winchell Smith was enticed from his retirement to direct it, June Walker and Glenn Hunter give to the two leading parts performances at once touching and amusing, and Mr. Sherwood brought to his writing of it warmth and sobriety and casual humor, so that it is in spite of a tendency to run slow and retell itself, a play one likes to watch and will like to remember.

It begins on Waterloo Bridge, that haunt of the shabby streetwalker stalking her prey. An American graduate of the chorus (the part played by Miss Walker with that vitality and genuineness of hers which are irresistible) joins the hopeless sordid ambush. Along comes a nice young fellow, a lance corporal, just out of hospital, an American in Canadian uniform. What more natural than that they should start talking, both of them so friendless in the city of margarine and nightly air raids. He takes her for what she looks like rather than for what she has been forced to become, and shares innocent gas-brewed tea in her frowsy bedroom.

IT is an old story—that of the nice young fellow who believes the best and does not even think of believing anything else. The woman of the streets who cannot bear to disillusion him is aghast at finding that his background is that of a small town Y. M. C. A., and feels herself falling in love with one who does not suspect what she is. That first act—"Waterloo Bridge" has only two acts of two scenes each—is the best half of the play, and the scene where the two stumble toward friendliness and love through small talk is something made singularly fresh and disarming by Miss Walker's energetic sincerity and Mr. Hunter's simplicity and sense of comedy.

The outcome of this near-tragedy, which is not as vivid as its introduction, is something you must see for yourselves. Inevitably he finds out what she is in spite of her brave efforts to leave him before he does find out. One likes the inconclusive ending, once more on Waterloo Bridge, because Mr. Sherwood refuses to tie things up neatly and leaves one chewing something more like life than most well-made plays dare to be.

YOUNG 1930, along with other good resolutions, sees a renewal of the yearly attempt on the part of the managers, to do something about the ticket scalping evil, which is one of the three great reason why the public stay away from the theater—the other two reasons being bad plays and density of traffic. And this year the attempt bids fair to come somewhat nearer success than usual. For the theater is desperate. Never has there been such a disastrous season financially. We have heard that cry before, but let us pretend for once that it is true, and that the theater is definitely and finally up against it.

It all began a few weeks ago when the Actors' Equity was approached by the managers with a pathetic plea that only a drastic measure, like Sunday night performances, could make the dollars swarm again. The actors—and who can blame them—like to have one night a week to themselves. They forget, perhaps, that the majority of them also have weeks, or more frequently months, to themselves, between jobs. Equity could with perfect righteousness have refused to give up the actor's night at home. But Equity went much further than that.

It told the managers that it might consider the question, but only if the managers first cleaned their own houses by removing that great stumbling block between the public and the public's affection for the theater, namely, the ticket-scalping. Do something about this, said Equity, and then perhaps we will listen to your suggestion for Sunday performances.

The managers evidently took these words to heart, for shortly after the New Year, several of them announced that they had agreed to eliminate the worst of the speculative evils, which is what is known as the "agency buy."

AND now a word of explanation as to the meaning of that term, which if things go as well as planned will disappear from the Broadway vocabulary by March next, when the managers' agreement comes into effect. Let us suppose that you are a producer, and that I am a ticket broker, scalper, speculator, entertainment agency or whatever one calls the gifted middleman who buys theater tickets low and sells them high.

You, as a producer, usually produce several shows during a season. One of them, according to the theatrical law of averages, is fairly sure to be a success, a "hit." The rest of them are probably doomed, by the merciless operations of the same law, to be failures. It is, of course, to your interest to cover yourself against possible loss from those failures as much, and as much in advance, as possible.

I, as a broker, make my big profits by holding tickets, in big blocks, for the shows which are so popular that the public will pay a premium to see them. I contract for so many tickets of a show which I think is going to be a hit at the boxoffice price, or often at wholesale rates somewhat less than the boxoffice price, and sell them to hungry theater-goers at 50 cents or 75 cents more than the boxoffice price. So far, so good—there is no great harm in the existence of agencies that give the theater-goer what he wants at a modest advance over what he would pay if he were willing to stand in line at the boxoffice.

BUT unfortunately there is more to it than just that. You, the producer, come to me and say that for the coming season you propose to present three comedies and one musical show, and that I, the broker, can have my slice of the gravy from the musical show if, and only if, I also contract to take so many tickets for the other three more doubtful ventures. Well, I must live, or at any rate it is my privilege to think so, and I reluctantly agree. I buy, in advance of Broadway presentation, so many hundred tickets in the orchestra for so many weeks of all four of your shows. Two of them are promptly flops. The musical comedy, on the other hand, is a "smash." People will often gladly pay twice the amount printed on the tickets in order to see it.

I would be satisfied with my premium of 50 or 75 cents were it not for the gloomy fact that you have forced me to load up with comparative worthless tickets for your other shows.

In order to recoup my losses on these I charge for the musical show all that the traffic will bear, which as you know, if you have ever tried to get tickets to the town's most popular musical comedy at the last minute, is sometimes twice the box-office price.

IT is this forced buy which all but two of the managers and most of the leading ticket agencies have agreed to eliminate, beginning March 1, by which time, it is estimated, the existing "buys" will have expired. If they stick to their guns, which is not an event one would care to bet on too heavily, the worst feature of the theater racket will have been eliminated.

Missouri To Be "Run" House

Skouras to Change Policy of Grand Avenue Cinema Palace Next Friday, But Will Not Return to Stage Show Idea—'Ginger' Rogers, Who Got Her Start as an Entertainer Here, Goes Over Big in Musical Comedy in New York—Bebe Daniels, Brought Back to Fame by "Rio Rita," Is Singing Again in "Love Comes Along."

By NIE

TIRED of seeing the Missouri Theater playing second fiddle to the Ambassador and the Grand Central, to say nothing of the competing nearby houses, the Skouras boys are announcing a change in policy of their big Grand Avenue Theater to go into effect next Friday. They will not reinstate the stage show idea at the Missouri but will, instead, play the spectacular films and big-star pictures which in the past have been held for runs at the Grand Central. The latter house, in turn, is to get the lesser screen offerings and may even take second run on the ones which prove the best drawing cards at the Missouri.

The first film, under the new policy, will be "Sally," a musical comedy picture made from Ziegfeld's stage offering with Marilyn Miller in her original role. "Sally" will open next Friday. It and the pictures to follow are known as "road show" attractions, made with the idea of playing them in legitimate theaters around the country at advanced prices. If they prove able to continue for a length of time in a theater with the large seating capacity of the Missouri, they will be held over for a second week or, perhaps, longer.

A list of bookings already completed for the Missouri includes such pictures of the "run" type as "General Crack" with John Barrymore, "The Love Parade," with Maurice Chevalier; "No, No, Nanette;" "The Vagabond King" with Dennis King; "Paramount on Parade," Paramount's first revue type production, with all their stars in the cast; Al Jolson in "Mammy;" "Song of the West," with John Boles, and "Under a Texas Moon," starring the former St. Louis favorite, Frank Fay.

This first list of bookings is expected to take care of the Missouri until the first of June.

At the same date as the opening of "Sally," the Grand Central will open with "Applause," starring Helen Morgan. This will probably be followed by George Arliss in his talkie version of "The Green Goddess."

BROADWAY has claimed as its own another youngster who rose to popularity and success in St. Louis motion picture theaters. For "Ginger" Rogers, the petite personality girl who developed her baby talk under the tutelage of Ed Lowry at the Ambassador, is the hit of "Top Speed" in New York and, in fact, is overshadowing in applause such favorites of the White Way as Irene Delroy and Lester Allen.

It was just about three and a half years ago that Charles Skouras in search for a girl singer booked "Ginger" blind into the Ambassador with a Herbert Rawlinson stage show. He knew little about her, for she had just shown a week or so around Chicago after working her way north through the tank towns from Texarkana, Ark., where at 16, she had stepped her way to local fame by winning a Charleston contest.

While Ginger did satisfactorily enough in her first week at the Ambassador to merit a return with Ed Lowry some months later, she wasn't a sensation. Personality girls are hard to find, however, so back came Ginger. This time Ed Lowry worked with her, and besides her songs he began "gagging" with her. From that time on she was a great favorite here. It was necessary to book Ginger in about every three months and with each visit she sang less and did more talk.

Then Publix Theaters booked her over their circuit. Hearing of her success, various theatrical managers sought her services. Earl Carroll was among them, likewise the Shuberts, but the contracts weren't satisfactory. Meanwhile Ginger married Jack Pepper, and then came an offer for a good part in "Top Speed." And it didn't take long for Ginger to show Broadway that picture stage shows are excellent training schools.

SOME idea of the importance of entertainment as an industry may be gathered from the announcement by the International Labor Office, in Geneva, Switzerland, that motion picture theaters throughout the world approximate 57,000, according to a survey made by the office, which also estimates that capital invested in the world film industry aggregates $4,000,000,000. Half of this total is invested in American companies. Investment in the British industry represents $350,000,000.

Of the 57,000 picture houses, 25,000 are in Germany and 4000 in England. Estimate is made that American theaters can accommodate 100,000,000 persons weekly.

That last figure means that there is a seat or more for every person of theater-going age in the United States—and most of them are usually occupied.

NOT so long ago when silent pictures were the vogue Bebe Daniels was, as they say in theatrical circles, slipping. Exhibitors the country over said that Bebe Daniels' picture meant only fair returns at the box office, and the box office is the gauge by which all picture stars, big and little, are measured. Possibly mediocre stories had a great deal to do with Bebe Daniels' decline, but at all events Paramount did not renew her contract.

Then came the talkies. Luther Reed, radio picture director, had been looking for months for a feminine lead for "Rio Rita." Scores of prima donnas were given a trial but did not qualify and finally some one suggested Bebe Daniels and she was given an audition before the microphone. What happened is movie history. Over night Bebe Daniels became the outstanding star in her line. Radio picture officials quick to see the possibilities of Miss Daniels in future productions secured her name to a long term contract and this week at the St. Louis Theater she is seen and heard in "Love Comes Along" her first picture since the now famous "Rio Rita."

WHATEVER William Fox's personal financial troubles may be—and they are many—his outfit out in California is going ahead with plans for a great producing year and his house here in St. Louis continues to do a business second to none in the city. Winnie Sheehan, the former New York newspaper reporter who stepped into big business when the films were young and who has charge of production at the Fox studios, passes out the word that of the pictures previously announced for showing during the next six months only five are incomplete, which provides immediate studio facilities at Fox Movietone City and at the Fox Hollywood Studios for the elaborate program of talking and singing productions as follows:

John McCormack, internationally-known concert singer and recording artist, a week ago yesterday completed his first singing and talking movietone produced at a cost in excess of $1,000,000.

Raoul Walsh, director of "The Cock-Eyed World," most successful of all of Fox's 1929 pictures, and of "Hot for Paris," shows

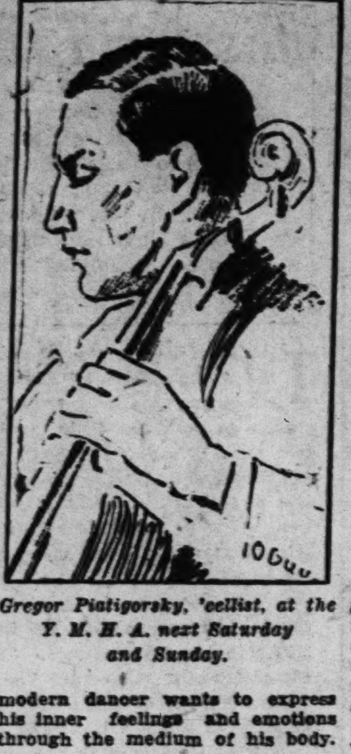
Arbos' Success With The Cleveland Orchestra

"A Modest But Authoritative Artist"—The Background of Kreutzberg's Crisp and Polished Art.

By Thomas B. Sherman



Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, at the Y. M. H. A. next Saturday and Sunday.

EN ROUTE to New York and to Spain, Enrique Fernandez Arbos stopped over in Cleveland long enough to direct the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra in two concerts. These concerts, which were presented during the first week of January, provoked unusual manifestations of approval from the public, the press and the men in the orchestra.

Critical comment on the opening concert united in praising Mr. Arbos for his illuminating interpretations and his mastery over the orchestra.

Arthur Shepherd, Music Editor of the Press, wrote as follows:

"The name of Enrique Fernandez Arbos has long been an honored and an illustrious one in Europe and in particular in Spain, the land of his birth, but not until last night were we made fully aware of his powers as a conductor and musician extraordinary.

"Looking astonishingly like the celebrated composer Saint-Saens, his demeanor is that of a modest but authoritative artist wholly immersed in his art, entirely devoid of tricks of showmanship, entirely uninhibited in his expressive powers; in short, a master musician.

"In a concert that will long remain memorable not alone by reason of its interpretative brilliance, but equally on account of the fascinating materials disclosed, we were once again moved to a sense of pride in the superlative powers of our orchestra, from which, through the painstaking training of Mr. Sokoloff we have learned to expect great things."

After commenting on the program which was composed of Weber's "Der Freischutz" overture, Cesar Franck's D Minor symphony, Ernesto Halffter's Sinfonietta, the Intermezzo from Granados' "Goyescas" and Mr. Arbos' arrangements of "Triana" and "Fete Dieu a Seville" by Albeniz, Mr. Shepherd continued by saying:

"In carrying them (the Albeniz numbers) to their true effulgence, Senor Arbos has not only created consummate masterpieces of orchestration, he has added materially to the joy of living. These incandescent scores are much more than tours de force, they are the ripe fruits of a rich and sensitive musicianship. They recall the paintings of Sorrolla with their great splashes of sunshine glimmering with lights and shadows of golden color.

"Senor Arbos' reading of the Franck symphony impressed me as being a thoroughly individual one. He achieved notable plasticity. His tempi were considerably faster in many passages than the customary interpretation, but having in mind the composer's penchant for short phrase-sequences which often militate against a large continuity, one perceives certain advantages in drawing the lines within a firmer rhythmic sweep. We doubt that "Pere" Franck ever dreamed of the almost shattering brilliance that was achieved in Senor Arbos' rendition, but there can be little doubt that he would have exulted in the exhilarating effect of the great finale.

"In passing, special mention should be made of the beautiful delivery of the haunting English-horn solo of the second movement as played by Mr. Brenner.

"Senor Arbos was enthusiastically acclaimed by a large audience and the ovation was deservedly shared by the orchestra."

THE highly polished art of Harold Kreutzberg and Yvonne Georgi, which revealed to the St. Louis public for the first time last Tuesday evening seems to call for something more than the customary morning after comment. These two talented Germans represent the farthest extreme that dancing has yet gone in compact expressionism and a brief survey of the background of their art is certainly appropriate at this time.

Fortunately for my readers I have on my desk a communication from Liesbeth Hoops, a teacher of dancing in St. Louis whose instruction embodies the essential principles to be found in Kreutzberg and Georgi. This enables me to round out my column with a second liberal quotation from somebody else's writings:

"The basis for the modern style of stage-dancing," says Mrs. Hoops "was laid around 1900 when Mensendieck, Dalcroze and others launched their schools for a new physical culture. The ballet had been the predominating stage-dance for more than 400 years. It underwent many changes during this period but all endeavors to develop a more valuable type of ballet dancing failed. Ballet was and is today a matter of amusement, entertainment, a stifling decorative appendage. The old stage-dance developed in excellent technique, especially of the legs, but there was not place enough in the ballet for the personal interpretation of the dancers.

"Expressing the personal emotions of the dancer is characteristic of the modern school. Technique is important, of coure, but it is not sufficient. The foundation of the modern emotional dance is a new physical education which sets free the inner qualities of self-expression. The qualities are inherent in everybody and they can be developed by systematic training of the whole body on a natural and pedagogical way. The modern dancer wants to express his inner feelings and emotions through the medium of his body.

"ISADORA DUNCAN was one of the pioneers of the modern dance. She disliked the drill of ballet. But her aim: The revival of the antique Greek style of dancing was not appropriate for our modern time.

"The founder of the new style of art-dance is Rudolf von Laban (born 1879) who laid its foundations in theory and practice. He worked for the emancipation of the dance. Laban banished acrobatic, drills and all vague movements from the dance. Clear-cut is the structure of the dance-composition, clear-cut are the movements of the artist. According to Laban's theories, all movements of the human body are based upon six elements: Six swings going in the six directions of the space: Left-right, forward-backward; deep-high. If these elements are properly combined in the movements of the dancer, then he or she has "raumgefuehl." Yvonne Georgi, the famous German dancer of the modern school, has this "space-feeling" in such a degree that she masters and fills the largest stage. Laban teaches that music should be composed to match the dance and not vice versa. In his opinion it is better to create the dance first and after that to compose the music. Another important step in the development of the dance was the invention of a system of dancing-notes (Tanzschrift) which enables an easier understanding among dancers. A uniform system of notes on which all agree has not been found yet.

"Laban saw the triumph of his theories in the dances of Mary Wigman, his former assistant and today the greatest dancer of the world. The development of the dance will be connected to a large extent with Mary Wigman. She has created numerous dance compositions of unforgetful beauty. It is impossible to describe the impression of these solo—or group dances. Her style is powerful, strict and almost solemn. Titles of her dances are "Vision," "Rebellion," "Chaos," "Circle." Efforts should be made to bring this outstanding woman to America.

"Harold Kreutzberg and Yvonne Georgi who were in St. Louis last Tuesday are the best internationally known German representatives of the modern movement. They are both influenced by Mary Wigman but their dances have all a strong personal color. Georgi was for two years in the Wigman school at Dresden. Kreutzberg who got his first education in the ballet is today the best male dancer of the new school."

Choral Clubs Will Present 'Elijah' at Odeon February 6

The Apollo-Morning Choral Clubs will present Mendelssohn's "Elijah" Thursday evening, Feb. 6, at 8:30 p. m., at the Odeon, with full orchestral accompaniment, Charles Galloway conducting. Bernard Ferguson will sing the title role, having sung it at more than 150 performances with leading choral clubs and oratorio societies throughout the United States. Mr. Ferguson sang in the authentic operatic production of "Elijah" given by the Boston Opera Co., which toured the East and Canada.

The tenor parts will be taken by Gilbert Morris, the soprano by Mrs. Hector Pasmezoglu and Mrs. Katherine Cowan, and the contralto by Mrs. Blanche Herrick Hopkins. The orchestra is being assembled by Max Steindel. Tickets will be on sale at Aeolian Co. after Jan. 20.

Big Battle Filmed.

A battle between the vagabonds of Paris and the soldiers of Burgundy is to be filmed for the all-Technicolor song romance, "The Vagabond King." Dennis King is starred in the production.

BEHIND THE SCREENS

OUT IN HOLLYWOOD

Rumors of Many Changes of Contracts Among the Big Stars

Victor McLaglen Real He-Man On and Off the Screen

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 11.

DAVE SILVERMAN, who came to Hollywood from St. Louis some seven or eight months ago as chief scorer for the Warner Brothers and First National, is getting his first chance before the camera in Alice White's picture, 'Playing Around," which we understand out here, is now showing in St. Louis. Silverman, in the role of a pirate chieftain, is leading the orchestra in a series of musical sequences during which time several close-ups of the former Ambassador and Missouri conductor are shown. He likewise is given a few lines to speak.

DAVE SILVERMAN

Dave has been scoring for a number of the talking hits. He handled the music in "The Careless Age" but did not have an opportunity to get before the lens. He also appeared in the background of Billie Dove's "Painted Angel," which also was shown in St. Louis recently.

HOLLYWOOD places its pedicured but slightly chilblained foot over the threshold of 1930 with some trepidation. The past year has been one of many vital statistics. A doctor's chart on 1929 would probably indicate an uncertain, palpitating pulse; respiration frequently irregular; elimination more than ample, and knee jerks aplenty. The picture industry has been well churned, upset and agitated in many ways. One result of the much mooted advent of conversational movies has been the return of many of our lisping boys and tongue-tied lassies to papa's piazza in Kansas and Wisconsin, where they are no doubt entertaining the local younger set with blood-curdling tales of Hollywood night life. The future looks dismal for the actor unable to speak everything from Esperanto to Arabian, do card tricks, tap dance, perform on the piano accordion, and yodel.

Rumors are flying thick and fast about the boulevard. . . . One hears that Clara Bow is not to continue with Paramount; that John Gilbert and Lon Chaney may not renew with M-G-M; that "Queen Kelly" may reach the screen after all, through United Artists; and that Knute Rockne, Notre Dame's football chauffeur, is to become a movie actor and do a part in M-G-M's "Good News." . . . Roscoe Arbuckle is said to be both supervising and directing at the Mack Sennett Studios. . . . Sol Lesser, Jackie Coogan's former producer, is to once more engage in production, specializing in Harold Bell Wright stories, the first to be "Eyes of the World." . . . Hal Roach, the producer, has decided to give up playing polo. Before leaving today for New York on studio business, Roach arranged for the disposal of his $40,000 stable of 16 polo ponies. This stable, considered one of the outstanding aggregations of polo mounts on the Pacific Coast, will be sold at once to polo players of the various clubs up and down the Coast. Will Rogers has already bought two of Roach's ponies, and Wrightman of Midwick three. Roach is one of the most colorful players on the turf. He plays a left-handed game, being one of the two left-handed players in the United States. Besides being one of Midwick's Big Four, Roach has captained the Uplifters team since its beginning three years ago, and is credited with materially aiding in the development of polo in Los Angeles.

THERE now are in the movies two outstanding actors of the "great he-man" school of the screen. With one of them I recall an interview not so long ago in which the actor's egotism revealed itself as limitless.

VICTOR McLAGLEN

In short, he admitted rather freely that he was good. He was a real actor, he knew his business. He was not like the rest. A slim veil of pretended modesty, behind which he hid at intervals for the sake of creating an impression was pierced violently and frequently by large and swaggering capital I's.

It was pleasant to leave his company. The incident is recalled, however, for the sake of contrast. Victor McLaglen is the other "great he-man."

ONE can talk to McLaglen for hours without hearing from his lips a discourse on his own peculiar qualities of greatness.

He talks interestingly, out of a background of culture, of world travel and adventure, of many things. Turn the conversation upon McLaglen himself, and he does not take your question as a cue to reveal his life story, his ambitions, the temperament, if any, which sets him apart from the other thousands of actors here.

He will answer fully, straightforwardly, matter-of-factly. Which is unusual enough to be refreshing—from an actor.

McLAGLEN is, in fact, an actor, second, a soldier and adventurer first. He comes from a family of fighters. Five McLaglen brothers were in the British army during the war. The eldest died in the service.

Victor, who ran away from home to fight in the Boer War, became provost marshal of Bagdad in the latest conflict. Before that, he had traveled the world, always in search of adventure. He had boxed and wrestled, followed a gold rush, played in medicine and wild west shows, toured with a wrestling act in vaudeville.

ANOTHER paradox: "Whispering" Jack Smith does not whisper. Smith, a baritone whose records and radio broadcasts have given him a national reputation, says if he actually whispered when he sang, he couldn't be heard.

Instead, he creates the impression that he is whispering by repressing the sound.

JACK SMITH

To do this necessitates three times more pressure on his vocal chords than required for ordinary singing. To relieve the strain and to give the throat and cords a rest, he often speaks a line in the song.

Long before he got his reputation, Smith used his present style of song delivery on the stage, but until he had an opportunity to sing over the radio he never was given any particular recognition.

GRANDFATHER and father had intended that Stanley Smith should follow in their footsteps and become a Hutchinson, Kan., banker.

But at 18, in his final year in high school, Stanley sang in an operetta and his voice and acting brought him a role on the stage with Lenore Ulric. Afterward he had an important role in "What Price Glory" on the road. Stock company experience led to the movies.

After Smith cast his lot with pictures, a year passed before he was given a role. It was in "The Sophomore."

PARAMOUNT borrowed him from Pathe to play opposite Nancy Carroll in "Sweetie." Paramount considered his work outstanding and did an unusual thing by buying his contract.

Now Smith is literally working night and day. Nearly every night he is playing the juvenile lead in Paul Whiteman's "King of Jazz," and during the day he is appearing opposite Miss Carroll in another picture.

WHAT a difference just one little week can make in a movie career! Lois Moran has learned. To her it has meant the difference between opportunity today, a certainty, and opportunity tomorrow — perhaps.

LOIS MORAN.

Lois was ready, a few weeks ago, to go to New York for a rest after three years of almost unbroken work in pictures.

Something happened to delay departure by seven days. In that time she met, in social channels and quite by chance, the noted Arthur Hammerstein of Broadway, who then was seeking a girl to sing the lead in his first screen operetta.

The outcome is that Lois makes no trip at all. Instead, she who eight months before sang not a note, is to have the chance of a lifetime to register as a screen singer of the first magnitude.

WHEN Hollywood went talkie-crazy, Lois began her vocal studies; two little songs she did in the "Movietone Follies" were held out and used later as the nucleus of her own picture called "Words and Music." Her voice, under training, increased in volume and quality. By the time Hammerstein heard her, it was a true lyric soprano.

Born in Pittsburg, she went, accompanied by her mother, to Paris to continue her study of dancing. There she became an operatic ballet dancer, and as a child played in two French movies.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, on a European jaunt in search of movie talent, advertised in Paris a competition for a Juliet to play opposite Ronald Colman as Romeo. Lois applied.

The American producer liked her photographs, but by the time they met he had decided to film "Stella Dallas" instead.

Back in America, Lois found a role in this, an offer from a Broadway stage producer, and the possibility of a part under the direction of D. W. Griffith, to consider. Three gifts on three silver platters!

She chose "Stella Dallas"—and got a headstart to cinema fame.

Amateurs to Give "Enchanted Well" By Anita G. Knight

AMONG the St. Louisans who have made contributions to the local stage is Anita Gabler Knight, whose play, "The Enchanted Well," is being presented by the Golden Goose Players, under the auspices of the Auxiliary of the Baptist Orphans' Home the evening of Jan. 24 and the afternoon of Jan. 25 in the auditorium of the Wednesday Club. Mrs. Knight is well known as a writer of verse, having been awarded first prize in the Wednesday Club Original Verse Contest for the past two years, first for her poem "A Patron to His Poet," and the next year "Aphelion." The first of these poems as well as a number of others have been read and acted in pantomime.

"The Enchanted Well," according to the Play Committee, has all the necessary elements of a successful fairy play, and has the power to capture the imagination and affection of children.

The players will be well known amateurs: Carol Crowe, Eloise Frazier, Mrs. Ira Fischer, Mrs. Ralph Fischer, Fred Houwink, Edward H. Barstow, Harold Elbert and Paul Chamberlain. It is being produced under the direction of Mrs. Florence Grant Armstrong and the scenery is being designed by Mrs. Edward H. Barstow.

The Little Theater To Pick Casts for Several New Plays

OPEN public try-outs for acting parts in Clemence Dane's "Granite" are announced by the Little Theater of St. Louis, 812 Union boulevard, to commence tomorrow night, at the theater and to continue through the week with the exception of Thursday.

These try-outs for the third season subscription production of the organization's current program are held, as stated by the management, in accordance with the policy of the theater to encourage open competition for parts in its performances so that all persons desirous of acting may have an opportunity under favorable circumstances.

"Granite" is a grim tragedy, laid during the Napoleonic era on the island of Lundy, off the English coast, dominated by a cruel and unscrupulous pirate who lures sailing vessels to destruction by setting false lights.

Simultaneous with these try-outs for "Granite," actors will be chosen for the second bill of plays by St. Louis authors, to be presented by the theater this year. From eight or ten one-act plays submitted by the playwriting group of the Little Theater, three have been chosen for production Feb. 24 to 27: "The Home Lovers," by Genevieve Knapp McConnel; "Right of Possession," by Edna Warren, and "Excuse It, Please," by Mrs. H. B. Spencer. Including the cast for "Granite," 23 actors in all will be chosen at the try-outs to begin tomorrow night.

MISSOURI TO CHANGE POLICY AND BECOME A HOUSE FOR RUNS

ing in St. Louis this week, is en route to California to produce "The Oregon Trail," which is being rather sweepingly announced as the first important historic American epic of the talking screen.

"Common Clay," Harvard prize play by Cleves Kincaid, will be made as a talking picture by Victor Fleming and Janet Gaynor will be heard and seen in Molnar's "Liliom," directed by Frank Borzage.

IN addition, Jack London's "The Sea Wolf" will be produced by John Ford, winner of the annual photoplay gold medal award for his "Four Sons," voted the best motion picture of 1929, and Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" will be filmed in sound and dialog by David Butler, who produced "Fox Movietone Follies of 1929."

Talking picture rights have been acquired for the following novels, of which movietone productions will be made: "Basquerie," by Eleanor Mercein; "The Mad Song," by Mabel Wagnalls; "The Last of the Duanes," by Zane Grey; "The County Chairman," by George Ade; "The Painted Lady," by Larry Evans, and "The Country Beyond," by James Oliver Curwood.

Dramatic successes from the stage which will be made as talking pictures include: "The Man Who Came Back," by Jules Eckert Goodman; "The Fatal Wedding," by Theodore Kramer, whose old stage thriller will be made as a melodramatic novelty; "The Yellow Ticket," by Michael Morton, and "The Dancers," by Gerald du Maurier.

During a recent stay in Europe, Sheehan acquired the rights to several dramatic and musical compositions of which the first to go into production will be Beatrice Lillie and a cast of English artists in "The London Revue," staged by Hazzard Short, with music by Richard Fall, Viennese composer, who is due to arrive in America Feb. 1.

Owen Davis, dean of American dramatists and Pulitzer play prize winner, and George Middleton, former president of the Society of Authors and Composers, head a list of 30 dramatists and dialog authors now working at Fox Movietone City. To these will be added, Feb. 1, S. N. Behrman, author of "The Meteor," and "Serena Blandish," who last week signed a contract with Sheehan.

"Romeo and Juliet" Music and a Corelli Suite on "Pop" Program at the Odeon

RANGING in its contrast of moods from Zandonai's "Romeo and Juliet" music, which in its tense drama faithfully suggests the tragedy of Shakspeare, to the lyricism of Corelli's Suite for Strings from Opera V., is the popular program with which Bernardino Molinari, at the Odeon at 3 this afternoon will say farewell to the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra's Golden Jubilee season. Molinari's two weeks' stay comes to a close after two regular symphonic programs, a students' concert program and this one Sunday "Pop."

Gregor Piatigorsky, the Russian 'cellist who is making his first tour of America this year, will appear alone at the Y. M. H. A.-Y. W. H. A. auditorium on Jan. 18 and 19, instead of in the company of Carlos Salzedo, the harpist, as originally announced. This was decided after Piatigorsky's success with the critics and the public of New York. He recently played the Dvorak concerto in that city with the Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Willem Mengelberg.

Piatigorsky was born at Ekaterinoslav, in the Ukraine. His only early instruction was that received at the hands of his father, who played the violin. At the age of 15 he became first 'cellist at the Imperial Opera in Moscow. In 1921 he made his way to Poland through the aid of smugglers, who robbed him of all his money. He got a job with the opera in Warsaw but later went to Germany to study.

An accidental engagement with the Berlin Philharmonic under Fuertwaengler led to his becoming first 'cellist of that organization. Later his private engagements became so heavy that he asked to be released. It was at that time that he was discovered by his American manager and offered a tour in this country.

The St. Olaf Lutheran Choir, internationally noted singing organization of St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minn., will give two concerts at the Odeon Tuesday, Jan. 21. Performances will be at 2 and at 8:15 p. m. The choir comprises about 60 men and women students, under the direction of Dr. F. Melius Christiansen, and draws for its programs upon the religious music of Bach, Palestrina, Liszt, Grieg and the early German composers. The first vested choir to venture upon the American concert stage, the St. Olaf organization has toured, with personnel changing yearly, since 1911. It has also given 25 concerts in Europe. At the close of the school year it will travel to Norway to sing at the dedicatory services of the new cathedral which is being built at Oslo by the King of Norway.

New York Day b

By O. O. McIntyre

IF I had my life to live over again, I'd—

Live in a city of about 100,000.

Save one-third of my salary.

Walk three miles a day.

Read everything that Shakspeare wrote before I was 25.

Go to a dentist every six months.

Be a newspaper reporter.

Take only the advice of men past 50 in important matters.

Have a pronounced hobby—like golf.

Become interested in the paintings of masters.

Go to church at least twice a month.

Give more of my time to helping others.

Bicycle through Europe.

Begin writing a novel before 30.

Try never to listen to gossip about others.

Learn to speak French and Italian.

Never buy stocks on margin.

Spend a year in the city of Washington, D. C.

Never reply to criticism.

Never use tobacco.

Visit New York for one month a year during the theatrical season.

Try to make enough money to have an English valet.

Own a ranch in Texas.

Have hot biscuits for breakfast every morning.

Have hot corn bread for dinner every night.

Spend at least three hours a week visiting the sick.

Never purchase anything but an aisle seat at the theater.

Make a greater effort to attend to my own business.

And after all this, I wouldn't be perfect, but I'd be a whole lot better off than I am now.

The most successful lawyers are those who make "the other side" believe the case in question interests them not at all. A great criminal lawyer in conferring with attorneys invariably delays appointments from day to day. In other words, to keep an opponent on the anxious seat is likely to make him amenable to reason.

One of the oldest tricks of unscrupulous art dealers is still employed. When a painting is admired by a customer, the dealer permits it to be hung in his home for a few days. He has fixed the price say at $10,000. A confederate calls in a day or so with prints of other paintings, as though a salesman on his own. Gaining admission to the house, he casually observes the "planted" picture and admires it.

"If ever you want to sell," he suggests, "I'll buy it for $14,000."

A check for $10,000 is almost invariably dispatched to the dealer to close the deal. But try to find the confederate!

George M. Cohan has suggested that the legitimate theater employ Mayor James Walker as the Will H. Hays of the collapsing amusement industry. A Czar is needed and Cohan believes that Walker, with his proven executive ability and love of the theater, is the man for the job. Even Hays' severest critics now admit he has worked wonders for the movies and the theater is in dire need of the same help.

A story theatrical press agents dream about came true the other week when Margaret Perry, a 16-year-old without stage experience, stepped into the star role of a Broadway play and triumphed. Miss Perry is the daughter of the distinguished actress Antoinette Perry, widow of the late Frank Freuauff, a financier. Her achievement was so marked that it was spread on all the front pages.

LIBRARIES OF CITY AND COUNTY TO UNITE

Plan Agreed to in Principle With Details and Financing Still to Be Worked Out.

Extension of the facilities of the St. Louis Public Library to St. Louis County, and the merging of library organizations now operating in the county with the city system, was approved in principle unanimously by the Libraries Committee of the Council on Metropolitan Government in its first meeting for organization at City Club yesterday. Dr. Arthur E. Bostwick, public librarian of St. Louis, was elected chairman of the committee and Mrs. J. K. Stribling of Webster Groves, vice chairman.

Agreed on the general proposition that one library system would be desirable for both city and county, members of the committee brought up questions of administration and the unification with existing libraries. Under plans suggested by Prof. Thomas H. Reed, the expert engaged to direct formulation of the plan for general city and county unification, the unified library system would be administered by a board representing both the city and county. Whether members of the library board would be appointed by an agency of the various communities, or by the head of the metropolitan government, in the present manner of appointment by the mayor of the city, was not decided.

The problem of absorption of existing libraries in the county was a chief point of discussion. Three libraries, in Kirkwood, Webster Groves and Overland, represent at present the total public library organization in the county. The former two, each of which has about 10,000 volumes, are supported by city taxes; the last, founded about four months ago, has 5000 volumes and is supported by the Parent-Teachers' Association of Overland. The Webster Groves institution, founded 20 years ago by the Monday Club, and supported by taxes for about a year, is the oldest of the three. None of the libraries is housed in its own building, the county municipalities being denied the right by law to vote bonds for that purpose.

Financing of the unified system, likely to be the point most difficult of solution, was not discussed, being delegated to a committee on details, composed of five members, to make recommendations. Tax rates for the municipally-supported libraries in both the city and county are now virtually the same, the rate in St. Louis and Webster Groves being 4 cents on the hundred dollars' valuation, and the rate in Kirkwood 5 cents. It is the hope of formulators of the unified plan to keep the rate approximately the same under any unification, and at the same time to extend the facilities of the present city library throughout the county, according to Prof. Reed.

COST OF GOVERNMENT IN 1927 WAS $12,179,000,000

Increase Incurred Mainly by Local Divisions, Board's Survey Shows.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The total cost of government in the United States, covering the aggregate expenditures of Federal, State and local governments, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, amounted to $12,179,000,000, according to a survey announced today by the National Industrial Conference Board.

The total outlay for 1926 was $11,616,000,000, the survey pointed out, stating that the increase in 1927 was incurred mainly by local governments whose expenditures exceeded the previous year's by more than $300,000,000. Federal and the aggregate of expenditures of State Governments increased only slightly more than $100,000,000 each.

The survey showed the total cost of Government in the United States had been increasing more rapidly than population since 1923. This has been due to increase in State and local government budgets as the Federal Government's expenditures per capita of population shows a slight net decrease in 1927 as compared with 1923.

Local government expenditures were: $54.41 per capita in 1927 as against $45.98 in 1923; the states: $13.96 against $11.12 and the Federal Government $34.40 as against $34.78 in 1923.

State governments spent 33.3 per cent more in 1927 than in 1923; local governments 25.6 per cent more and the Federal Government only 4.7 per cent more.

BOY WHO ADMITTED 18 THEFTS GETS 5 YEARS AT BOONVILLE

Irvin Rovic, 16, Pleads Guilty of $120 Burglary; Companion Bound Over.

On a plea of guilty of second-degree burglary and larceny, Irvin Rovic, 16 years old, 6324 Delmar boulevard, University City, was sentenced to five years in Boonville Reformatory, in Juvenile Court at Clayton Friday.

Rovic was arrested Wednesday morning, after he had displayed a gold cigarette case on which the name English was engraved. He implicated another youth, Morris Sobel, 18, 721A Westgate avenue, and confessed they had committed 18 robberies and burglaries within the last two months, the loot comprising chiefly jewelry, money and clothing of a total value of $3000.

Sobel waived preliminary hearing before Justice of the Peace Ladd, in University City, and was bound over to the grand jury under $5000 bond. The specific charge to which Rovic pleaded guilty was the burglary of the home of Charles R. English, 6605 Kingsbury boulevard, in which $120 of jewelry, including the cigarette case, was taken.

Discussion of "Audible Light."

"Audible Light" will be discussed by John B. Taylor, consulting engineer of the General Electric Co., at a meeting of the St. Louis Electrical Board of Trade at Hotel Statler, at noon Tuesday. The lecture will be accompanied by demonstrations with laboratory equipment.

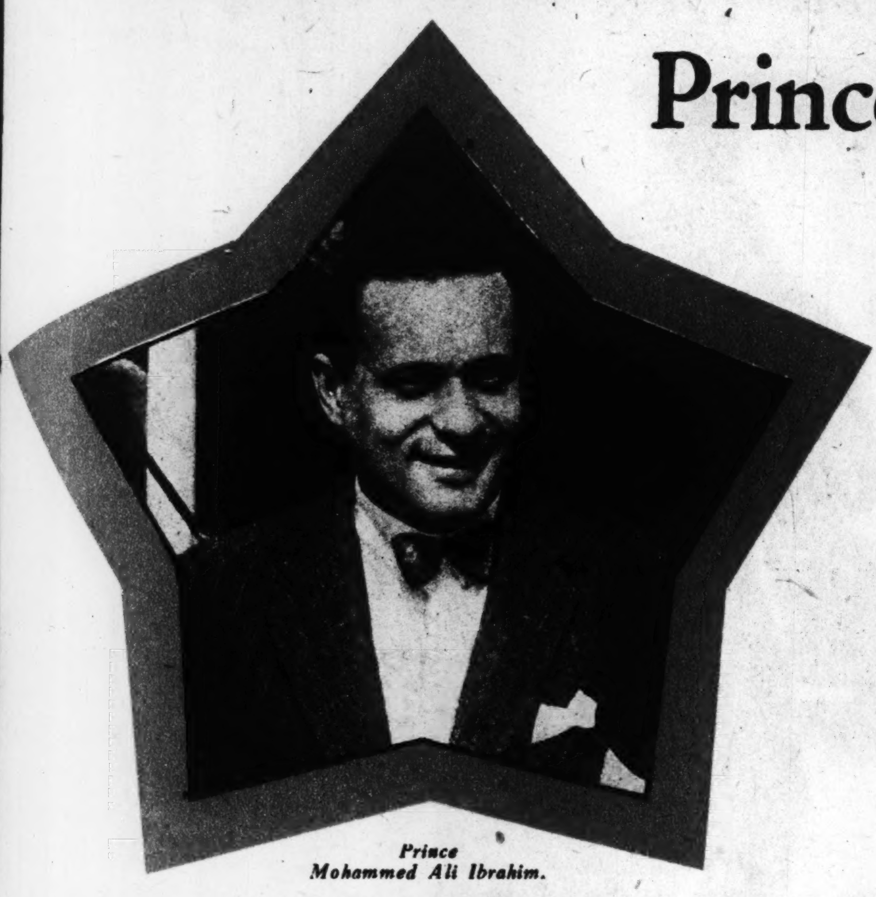
Pearl Ginsberg's Romance and How She Became a Prince's Bride

The Daughter of an Obscure New York Furrier, Whose Husband May Be the Next King of Egypt.

Pearl Ginsberg, now the wife of Prince Mohammed Ali Ibrahim, nephew of the King of Egypt.



Prince Mohammed Ali Ibrahim.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

NEW YORK.

THE old Biblical tale of the Hebrew maiden who became Queen Esther is now finding a modern parallel in the romantic story of Pearl Ginsberg, daughter of an obscure New York furrier and formerly a movie actress under the name of Pearl Shepherd, who may be the next Queen of Egypt. For she is now Princess Pearl, and is living in regal luxury in Paris as the wife of Prince Mohammed Ali Ibrahim, possible successor to his uncle, King Fuad, Khedive of Egypt.

Of late conflicting rumors of her status have come from abroad, some saying that her marriage was regular in every respect and others that it was a morganatic marriage, which may bar her succession to the throne. Pearl's family in New York, other than to confirm the fact of a marriage, refuse to go into details, saying that, for political reasons, the Prince wants no publicity on the subject. But if, as many contend, Pearl's marriage was not morganatic, the former Harlem actress may yet reign supreme in the royal palace of Egypt, whose pyramids were once erected by the toil and sweat of her enslaved ancestors.

The meeting and marriage of Pearl and the Egyptian Prince is one of those true-life romances that might well be a plagiarism from the banal Cinderella-to-Princess moving picture scenarios.

Little was known of the Prince in this country before his first visit here early in the spring of 1922. Among fashionable cosmopolites he enjoyed something of a reputation as a royal play-boy in Europe's baccarat belt and as a lively young man whose light-hearted extravagances added to the gayety of Parisian life. The eclat of his arrival in New York, however, promptly and prominently thrust him into the public eye. With him came two Mercedes automobiles and 18 pieces of luggage. And as his private secretary he brought along "Blink" McCloskey, a former Philadelphia prize-fighter whom Mohammed had acquired abroad. The Prince, a vivacious, olive-skinned young man of Semitic features and a gay air, is an ardent athlete and skillful amateur boxer and McCloskey won the job as royal secretary and boxing instructor by challenging and defeating the Prince's former secretary.

The Prince was in New York only a week when the bright lights of Broadway were rapidly multiplied by reflections from the brightly-polished surface of his Mercedes, the gold he so lavishly scattered and the diamonds he lightly bestowed on the beauties and actresses who caught his royal fancy.

For instance, there was Mabel Withee, popular musical comedy star, who touched the Prince's susceptibilities one night as he watched a performance of "The Rose of Stamboul." An introduction was arranged backstage, and next day the theater's press agent was rendered all but inarticulate by Miss Withee's receipt of a gorgeous lavalliere from the Prince. It contained about a dozen large, sparkling diamonds, and the only condition attached to the gift was that Miss Withee should wear it during her performance that night, so the Prince might have the pleasure of seeing her with his gift.

The Prince, whose yearly income is said to range anywhere between $200,000 and three times that amount, certainly made no effort to economize while in New York. Miss Withee was not the only beauty to receive such a token of admiration, and when secretary-pugilist "Blink" McCloskey estimated that his royal employer had spent no less than $90,000 during his six weeks in New York, the statement was accepted as anything but an exaggeration.

King Fuad of Egypt.

BUT before Mohammed departed these shores he underwent an experience that was to alter his entire scheme of existence. The aforementioned Mabel Withee was to meet the Prince one night at the Casino in Central Park. He arrived ahead of time and stepped into the private office to chat with Charles Zittel, owner of the Casino and publisher of Zit's Theatrical Weekly. And there he was introduced to Pearl Shepherd, born Ginsberg—blonde, blue-eyed and pensive.

She was then 20 years old and for a number of years had been playing important parts in the movies. One look at Pearl and the heir to Egypt's throne felt himself as much in the air as if he were perched on top of one of the pyramids back home. Impulsive, if nothing else, the Prince promptly cancelled his engagement with Miss Withee and spent the rest of the evening with Miss Ginsberg. Next day he took her to dinner at the Ritz-Carlton. And apparently that was all there was to it, for in another day Prince Mohammed boarded his ship and returned to Europe.

But something had happened to Mohammed. Paris, somehow, wasn't as he had left it. That city of beautiful boulevards and ebullient beauties seemed to have lost practically all its charms. It suddenly dawned on the Prince that life without Pearl, though probably worth living, was disconcertingly short of perfection. Cablegrams to Pearl's home in the upper west side of New York began to follow one another in rapid succession. The modest home of Morris Ginsberg, a fur merchant in no more than moderate circumstances, began to be a regular calling place for messenger boys carrying cables from a Prince of Egypt. Pearl, of course, was flattered by these expressions of royal sentiment, but was inclined to regard them as perhaps more ardent than enduring. But the cable letters steadily increased in warmth and soon became out-and-out expressions of love. The Prince was shortly pleading with her to join him in Paris and offered to send no less than $50,000 to take care of her expenses.

Pearl, to be sure, was far from indifferent to His Highness' advances. But was it proper for an unmarried young lady to go to Paris to visit a man, even if he happened to be a Prince? Pearl and her family agreed that it certainly wasn't. And they further agreed that if the Prince's intentions were as honorable as he declared he would come for the young lady himself. And the Prince did! Since the Pearl would not go to Mohammed, Mohammed, to paraphrase the old saying, would come to his Pearl.

In the early summer of 1923 the Prince returned to New York. This time, however, he disembarked quietly, without his automobiles and his boxing teacher and without any desire to attract attention to himself, for he was coming on a matter of personal business. He met Pearl. He met her brother and sister, and he met Mr. and Mrs. Morris Ginsberg. The meetings were evidently mutually gratifying, for when the Prince sailed again on the Aquitania on June 12, the stateroom adjacent to his own was occupied by Pearl, accompanied by Mrs. Morris Ginsberg as chaperon.

The romance attracted considerable attention at the time and Prince Mohammed was said to have declared to members of Pearl's family that he was going to marry her if he had to give up his chance for the throne, his religion and even his fortune to do it. And if the royal uncle, King Fuad, should object, why, the Prince was going to have the bride of his choice anyway.

The Prince and his pugilistic secretary, "Blink" McCloskey.

Mrs. Ginsberg remained with her daughter and the Prince until October, and when she returned to her home in New York it was with the relieved and contented air of a mother who has had the satisfaction of having seen her oldest daughter married, and exceptionally well married at that. That same October Mohammed and Pearl went to Egypt. There, in the throne room of the royal palace at Cairo, the young lady from Harlem was presented to His Majesty. There was a conversation of several minutes' duration, after which the Khedive expressed entire satisfaction with the Prince's lady.

After receiving the royal blessing, the young couple returned to Paris, where they still make their home. The exact date or circumstances of the marriage have never been divulged, allegedly because political advantage might be taken in Egypt of the fact that he chose for his bride a girl of another country and another religion. Indeed, the marriage was kept secret for a year, and even then the Prince, when interviewed by newspaper reporters, refused to commit himself. Thus no one to this day knows definitely whether or not it was a morganatic union, but that there was a marriage is emphasized by Pearl's family in New York, and by other corroborating facts.

EVERYWHERE in Europe the former movie actress is known as Princess Pearl. She occupies a superb establishment on the Bois de Boulogne, where her salon is now one of the most fashionable in Paris. Following the Oriental fashion, Prince Ibrahim maintains a separate establishment a few doors away. His daily comings and goings with the young woman are set forth in the fashion columns of the Paris press with worthy prominence. They were seen together daily at the races at Chantilly last season, and to the numerous Americans who met him he was presented by her as "My husband, the Prince," a form of introduction that leaves little room for guessing.

The secrecy being maintained regarding the details of the marriage, says Harold Ginsberg, Pearl's brother in New York, is due to certain injunctions laid upon the Princess by the Khedive. These edicts, he explained, have to do with contingencies that confront all royal families where a member of the house marries a woman not of royal blood.

Certainly there is plenty of evidence of the Egyptian Prince's devotion to his wife. They are always seen together, at the opera, riding in the Bois, driving at Versailles or hobnobbing with her American friends in the grill of the Hotel George V.

Whether or not the former Pearl Ginsberg's marriage with royalty is morganatic, it is obviously not one of unexciting domesticity. But what it will be if Prince Mohammed ever ascends the throne of Egypt is a question that challenges the imagination.

Sir John Robert O'Connell.

LONDON.

WHEN Sir John Robert O'Connell, Ireland's greatest legal advocate and an outstanding figure before the highest courts of the British Empire, closed his offices in Dublin and London four years ago, there was much speculation as to the motives prompting his retirement from a calling which paid him close to $500,000 a year.

His associates at the time sought to explain his action as that of a grief-stricken man, for his beautiful wife, Mary Scally O'Connell, had just died, and the story was that he would spend a year or so in travel in an attempt to forget his great sorrow.

It was reported that the eminent solicitor would, after a sojourn in the Holy Land, resume practice in the courts of Ireland and Great Britain and once more accept briefs for the most powerful banking, industrial and shipping organizations of the United Kingdom.

Yet no one could speak definitely regarding the plans of Sir John, for he kept his own counsel, refusing to be inveigled into any discussion of his business affairs. And while friends of the great lawyer were wondering if he had suddenly become bereft of his reason, he resigned, suddenly and without a word of explanation, his directorship in the many banking and industrial corporations of which he had long been a power.

Then came the news that Sir John had surrendered his membership in the most exclusive clubs of Ireland and Great Britain, as well as severing his connections with various social, civic, educational and university bodies, in which for years he had played a prominent role.

But a still greater surprise was in store for the friends of Ireland's most distinguished student of jurisprudence. In a gracious letter he begged His Majesty, King George of England, by whom he had been elevated to knighthood, to erase forever his name from the list of royal honors.

His palatial Dublin mansion, at 10 Mountjoy Square, and his London apartments in fashionable Mayfair, both long the scene of many brilliant social and political gatherings, were put on the auction block.

His paintings and his collections of engravings, probably one of the finest in the world, as well as priceless first editions of the drama and music, together with antiquities from all parts of the globe, were also ordered sold. The throwing on the market of the O'Connell art treasures created a furore amongst the dealers of New York, Paris and London.

He liquidated his enormous holdings of gilt-edge stocks and bonds. after which his wealth, running well into the millions, was withdrawn from his strong boxes in Dublin and London.

The effacement of Sir John Robert O'Connell, K. C. B., M. A., LL. D., F. S. A., F. R. G. S., from the affairs of men and the world was complete.

And then into the mysterious nowhere the great lawyer vanished. His name soon became but a memory in circles where once upon a time it had been a power.

Then, just the other day, after four years of whisperings and gossip, much of which was malicious, the story of his disappearance, with its amazing sequel, was disclosed to the public.

Sir John Robert O'Connell was now Father O'Connell, an humble priest of the Roman Catholic Church.

The $500,000-a-year solicitor had become a Black Monk of the Benedictine Order.

The British knight, the millionaire counselor, the banker, the industrialist, the clubman, had stripped himself of power, wealth and honors so that he might spend the rest of his days in poverty and prayer as a monastic at Downside Abbey, Somersetshire, England.

BEHIND Sir John's renunciation of the world lies not only one of the most poignant dramas of domestic love and loyalty, but the story of a man's unwavering belief that in devotion to God is to be found the surcease of worldly cares and sorrows.

With the passing of his life partner in 1925 the world ended for the Dublin-London solicitor, though he thanked a Divine Providence that he had been blessed with nearly a quarter of a century's marital bliss and happiness. When his wife died, life was still full of honors for him. He was in the very zenith of his powers, for he was only 57, and fame was still beckoning him onward. Yet, figuratively speaking, he took himself out of the world. For him the materialistic rewards of a materialistic civilization held no lure. He was in quest of the spiritual—he was seeking happiness, a soulful happiness, and thus his steps turned towards a life of monasticism.

Immediately after his ordination as a priest in the Benedictine Order, the one-time British knight and distinguished legal advocate became the central figure in a news story of more than passing interest. An inquisitive public was eager to learn from his own lips just what had induced him to forswear a princely income and a great career, and dedicate his life to poverty as an humble priest.

In a most revealing fragment of autobiography, Father O'Connell answers those who are now asking the question, "What made you become a priest?" with a vividness almost dramatic. He said:

"After the very beautiful and moving ceremony of my ordination I was hurrying off to the North of England, and at King's Cross railway station happened to run into an old friend whom I had not seen for many years.

"Although I should have preferred to have sat in the corner of the train to think over and give thanks for the ceremony which had just then been completed, yet the claims of an old friendship were not to be denied, and my friend insisted on coming into the carriage and taking up the threads of our old friendship.

"After a few minutes, looking at my Roman collar, he said: 'Have you become a priest?' When I admitted the undeniable fact he remarked: 'But when I knew you you were a lawyer in a largish way of business.' I could not question the accuracy of his memory, and then, fully launched on the tide of reminiscence, he added: 'You were connected with one of the big railways in Ireland.' Again I had to admit the soft impeachment."

SURELY, he had been a "lawyer in a largish way of business," if being the head of the firm of Thomas F. O'Connell & Son, solicitors of Dublin and London, practicing before the highest courts of Ireland and arguing legal questions before the Privy Council of Great Britain, counted for anything.

In his day, which was so recent, Sir John had been something more than an ordinary solicitor. His practice frequently called him to such far-away spots as India and Australia, and he was almost as well known in Paris and Rome as the greatest advocates of Continental Europe.

He was the solicitor to the Dublin & Southeastern Railway Co. of Ireland. Important shipping and railroad litigation called him to many parts of the British Empire.

Lord Hewart, the Lord Chief Justice of England, King's Bench Division, once made the observation that Sir John R. O'Connell was probably the best-posted man in the world on the legal problems of rail and sea transportation. For his services in this special branch of law work he commanded huge fees, often getting as much as $50,000 for the briefest kind of an opinion.

Thus, there is no questioning the fact that Father O'Connell had been a "lawyer in a largish way of business."

Picking up the thread of the narrative, with its exchange of questions and answers between the newly-ordained Benedictine priest and the inquisitive passenger, the former lawyer found himself in a new role—a witness undergoing a grilling.

"AND then," continues Father O'Connell, "pursuing remorselessly the paths of memory, again my passenger-friend said: 'By the by, were you not the director of some bank?' And I had to admit that such had been the case."

The institution in question was the National Bank of Ireland, with branches all over the Free State and Northern Ireland. In the matter of banking law, the one-time solicitor was a noted authority. Through his counsel the Saorstat Eireann's financial and monetary system was put on a sound basis. He evolved the plan of stabilizing that country's exchange, without the necessity of it having to pay tribute to the international banking groups of London and New York.

Lombard street, the heart of "the city," as London's financial district is known, was not unacquainted with Sir John Robert O'Connell. During his solicitorial days he served as consultant to some of the most powerful banking firms in Britain. Few great loans for projects in the Orient, especially India, were floated without his advice.

Whenever shares were to be issued for the financing of tea and rubber plantations, or similar enterprises, the invariable query of London's stock-selling fraternity was: "Has O'Connell passed on the deal?"

His mastery of the intricacies of the laws of India, Turkey, Arabia, Persia, Siam, the Federated Malay States and Australia saved his English banking clients millions of pounds.

In a dispute concerning the financing of a railway project in Hungary, he astounded the opposing counsel, eminent lawyers of Budapest, by quoting an ancient Magyar law, which had to do with post roads and highways of travel for merchandise. For winning this case a British banking house handed him a check for a sum equaling $150,000.

He was often importuned by British banking and railway chieftains to settle in London the year around, instead of making fortnightly visits from Dublin. He balked at the suggestion, explaining that Dublin was the only home for a true Irishman.

As Father O'Connell goes on with his story, getting closer all the time to the reasons for his joining the priesthood, we find the man subjecting himself to what amounts almost to an analytical dissection of his own soul.

"Then," goes on the newly-made Black Monk, "looking at me with an eye in which curiosity and commiseration were united in equal parts, my fellow-traveler exclaimed, 'Good heavens, what made you become a priest?'

"It was a heart-searching question, not to be adequately dealt with in a 'third class smoker,' and I parried the inquiry by asking if he had pulled down his handicap in golf—a subject of such absorbing interest that it occupied the rest of the journey until, with a hearty handshake, he got out of the train at York.

Buried under the frozen earth and heaps of accumulations are the remains of an "Ivory Age." Perhaps before or while the Mayas built their cities and temples in Central American jungles, expert craftsmen in the desolate polar wastes were fashioning, out of walrus tusks, tools, weapons and trinkets of exquisite beauty.

A leading discoverer of this unique ivory culture is Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology at the National Museum in Washington. He has just returned from Alaska, bringing a large additional collection of the handiwork of this ancient people whose artistry arouses the enthusiasm of professional anthropologists.

There is nothing else like it in the world, Dr. Hrdlicka says. The first substantial hint of the existence of this culture came in 1926 when the Smithsonian anthropologist visited Alaska in an effort to trace the paths of the ancestors of the Indians and the Eskimos from northern Siberia into North America. Here and there he found finely carved specimens of ivory incised with conventionalized figures and curved-line designs which had been excavated from old refuse heaps by the Eskimos.

Where did they come from? They were recognized to represent a culture far superior to that of the present-day Eskimos and Indians of Alaska, the craftsmanship of men with Arctic ideals and a delicacy of technique far beyond merely everyday demands. Dr. Hrdlicka's excavations, matched by those of Diamond Jenness, a Canadian anthropologist of note, led him to conclude that this culture is of considerable age and the work of a highly intellectual people.

Another member of the National Museum staff, Henry B. Collins Jr., entered the Alaskan field in 1928 and followed Dr. Hrdlicka's route to the Bering Sea. Working at St. Lawrence Island that summer and again in 1929, Collins excavated frozen refuse heaps, where prehistoric men had lived, and dug out of the earth many specimens of the ancient carved ivory.

RETURNING last summer, Dr. Hrdlicka was able to secure hundreds of new specimens of the fossil ivory culture, all in a good state of preservation, which represent almost fully the mechanical arts of these people. For years, it was learned, objects of this kind had been unearthed by the natives and sold to dealers as old ivory.

As now arranged at the National Museum, the objects suggest the array of polished steel instruments in a surgeon's office. There are numerous styles of very beautiful axes, picks, awls, drills, needles, daggers, gouges, scrapers, with which the ancient workmen plied their trades. There are also many adzes, wedges and other objects, the use of which is uncertain.

The axes and similar instruments are "hefted" or balanced correctly, in itself evidence of a high culture level. Some of the adzes were fashioned from ivory sledge hammers. Evidently ivory was valued material, to be used over and over again.

Tools and Art Objects Carved Out of Walrus Tusks Furnish New Clews to the Mysterious Migrations of Prehistoric People From Asia.

JUST below the Arctic Circle, on the bleak tundras of northwestern Alaska, flourished one of the New World's oldest and greatest cultures.

Buried under the frozen earth and heaps of accumulations are the remains of an "Ivory Age." Perhaps before or while the Mayas built their cities and temples in Central American jungles, expert craftsmen in the desolate polar wastes were fashioning, out of walrus tusks, tools, weapons and trinkets of exquisite beauty.

A leading discoverer of this unique ivory culture is Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology at the National Museum in Washington. He has just returned from Alaska, bringing a large additional collection of the handiwork of this ancient people whose artistry arouses the enthusiasm of professional anthropologists.

There is nothing else like it in the world, Dr. Hrdlicka says. The first substantial hint of the existence of this culture came in 1926 when the Smithsonian anthropologist visited Alaska in an effort to trace the paths of the ancestors of the Indians and the Eskimos from northern Siberia into North America. Here and there he found finely carved specimens of ivory incised with conventionalized figures and curved-line designs which had been excavated from old refuse heaps by the Eskimos.

Where did they come from? They were recognized to represent a culture far superior to that of the present-day Eskimos and Indians of Alaska, the craftsmanship of men with Arctic ideals and a delicacy of technique far beyond merely everyday demands. Dr. Hrdlicka's excavations, matched by those of Diamond Jenness, a Canadian anthropologist of note, led him to conclude that this culture is of considerable age and the work of a highly intellectual people.

Another member of the National Museum staff, Henry B. Collins Jr., entered the Alaskan field in 1928 and followed Dr. Hrdlicka's route to the Bering Sea. Working at St. Lawrence Island that summer and again in 1929, Collins excavated frozen refuse heaps, where prehistoric men had lived, and dug out of the earth many specimens of the ancient carved ivory.

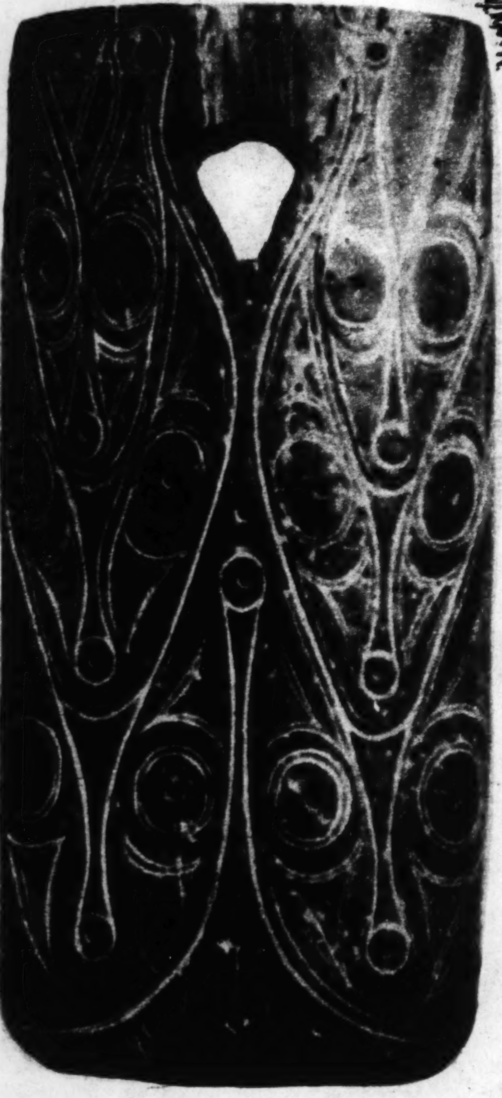
RETURNING last summer, Dr. Hrdlicka was able to secure hundreds of new specimens of the fossil ivory culture, all in a good state of preservation, which represent almost fully the mechanical arts of these people. For years, it was learned, objects of this kind had been unearthed by the natives and sold to dealers as old ivory.

As now arranged at the National Museum, the objects suggest the array of polished steel instruments in a surgeon's office. There are numerous styles of very beautiful axes, picks, awls, drills, needles, daggers, gouges, scrapers, with which the ancient workmen plied their trades. There are also many adzes, wedges and other objects, the use of which is uncertain.

The axes and similar instruments are "hefted" or balanced correctly, in itself evidence of a high culture level. Some of the adzes were fashioned from ivory sledge hammers. Evidently ivory was valued material, to be used over and over again.

Beyond this nothing is known for certain about the vanished race. Their bones and the remains of their habitations, if anything remains, are buried far under the frozen sands and have not yet been discovered.

The physical geography of the region has changed and obliterated all traces of the ancient habitations, as well as burials. Consequently nobody knows where to dig for them and some fortunate discovery must be made before it will be practicable to excavate. Northwestern Alaska is not a field where scientists can dig at random in the mere hope of finding something.



An ivory slab decorated with carved lines. Present-day Eskimo art is straight-lined.

But the carved ivory pieces themselves, Dr. Hrdlicka says, furnish clews for reconstructing a startling picture of ancient days in the Far North when the human race was establishing its footholds on the American continent.

The climate probably has not changed materially. It is now cold and stormy with short summers and long, cruel winters. The landscape is dreary and unstimulating.

This is the sort of environment in which one would not expect to find a high culture level. Ordinarily under such conditions men have all they can do to keep body and soul together. The most they develop is a purely utilitarian culture evolved to meet the demands of life. Art is the product of kindlier climates where man has leisure, security and plenty.

The very existence of art means that man has mastered his environment. This gives the first clew to the nature of this early people. They must have had both time and conditions for the development of their artistic culture. There must have been an old high polished stone age civilization somewhere in the Far North.

Furthermore, ivory carving is not likely to have been an isolated phenomenon, for artistic culture does not develop that way. Art is an expression of higher mental activities. It does not exist independently of such social institutions as religion and law, and it affords a fair measure of the development of these.

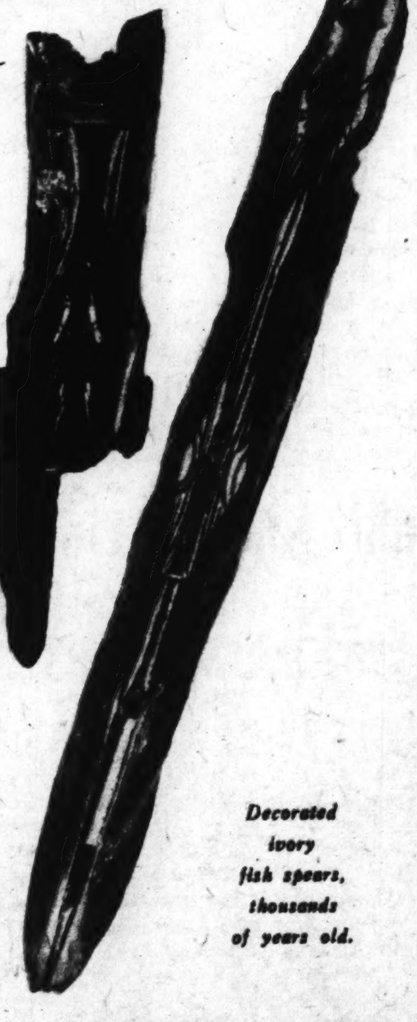
Consequently it is fair to assume, Dr. Hrdlicka believes, that anthropology stands on the brink of a major discovery and that in the years to come the frozen tundras of the northermost lands surrounding the Bering Sea with its islands will yield more wonders. These ivory pieces are merely the beginning of the story of this strange, seemingly vanished people.

It is really, Dr. Hrdlicka says, a high polished stone age culture, but instead of stone the workmen used ivory; and because of the very nature of the material their artistry improved. The ivory, imperishable, relatively easy to work, and taking a beautiful polish, was just what was needed for their growing ideals of beauty.

WHO were these prehistoric artisans? This question must remain unanswered for the present, although there are some indications which point to their probable origin. First, nothing has been found which shows an evolution of the remarkable culture in that environment. The most exquisitely carved objects are the oldest. But cultures do not drop out of the sky or spring from the earth fully formed. They come only with slow, painful evolution.

In this case it is evident that the artistry must have been evolved elsewhere and brought to the Bering Sea region bodily. The one place from which it could have come was Northern Asia, although just where in the vast territories of Northern Asia remains to be determined.

It was a coastal as well as land culture. Its presence in the northernmost parts of the Bering Sea is a further strong evidence that this was the path of immigrants into North America, a position Dr. Hrdlicka long has maintained.



Decorated ivory fish spears, thousands of years old.

The theory has been that native groups in Siberia, pushed farther and farther eastward and northeastward by the pressure of populations and the retreating game, finally came to the ocean and following this to the end of the land.

But on a clear day they might see the outlines of new land over the water. So they came, a comparatively few at a time, but over the course of many centuries, if not thousands of years. And they carried their dialects, cultures and institutions with them.

A present-day Eskimo holding a walrus tusk.

The Eskimos of today have an ivory culture which bears strong evidence of having been inherited from this first great artistic era, but it shows considerable devolution. Life has been too hard for the Eskimos to reach again the level of their predecessors or ancestors.

The Eskimo ornamentation, for instance, is distinguished by straight lines, simple geometric designs, and natural—instead of conventionalized—representation of animals, scenes, etc. There are no curved lines. And the difference between an artistic curved line and a plain straight line graven on ivory or stone is a great difference in the eyes of the anthropologist.

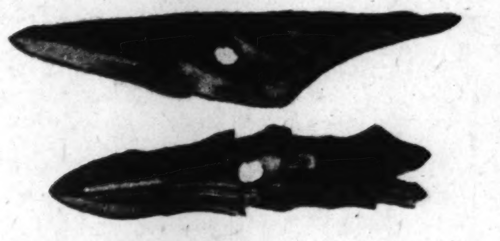
THE National Museum collection contains also many tools for use in making nets, ornately decorated fish spears, spoons, knives and kitchen utensils, and purely ceremonial objects ornamented with human or animal figures which show delicate carving and polishing. There are figures of fish and mammals with many conventionalized details of design.

The precise age of this ivory culture, says Dr. Hrdlicka, cannot be determined from present evidence.

"All we can say," he says, "is that it is very old." It is older than any other human remains found so far in those parts of the New Yorld.

The migrations of the Asiatic people into America must have been very slow, requiring hundreds of generations, to reach the distribution found when white men first came to America. The main routes they followed were doubtless those along the coasts.

Some of the aboriginal immigrants invaded also the interior of the continent by way of the Yukon and other rivers. In an effort to retrace these paths, Dr. Hrdlicka, accompanied by Dr. George Maly of the Charles University of Prague, Czechoslovakia, last summer made another journey to Alaska.



Finely carved harpoon heads of walrus tusk.

A part of this trip was rather adventurous. For over 1500 miles the pair traveled in an open 18-foot craft. It was a journey in almost continuous daylight, but through fog and frequent rains and storms.

One of the main facts ascertained definitely on this journey by Dr. Hrdlicka is that there is no line of demarcation, either physical or cultural, between the Indian and the Eskimo along the Yukon. Both shade into each other.

The scientist was looking especially for ancient burials. These were difficult to discover, yet some were found that antedate anything in this line found on the river before. He carried on his work with the full knowledge of both the whites and the natives and was aided by their co-operation.

THE skeletal remains collected tell an interesting story of the migrations and perhaps evolution of the later people of the Far North, but shed no light on the very ancient culture or on the earlier migrations. The possibility of finding really ancient remains is very remote, Dr. Hrdlicka says, because of the changing coasts and banks of the rivers along which the people traveled.

Only a rare accident would reveal graveyards thousands, or even hundreds, of years old, in the rocky foothills or the jungle flats of the present stream.

Along the lower Yukon the scientists found a culture that was marked by a profusion of stone implements of bone and antler, but essentially Eskimo. In the middle area the variety of implements decreases, but two new types make their appearance, showing the shading off into Indian culture. These are bilateral stone axes and tomahawks. Pottery was of the same poor quality along the whole river, with little difference in form and decoration.

Dr. Hrdlicka was able to get on friendly terms with the natives by giving medical treatment, explaining his purposes, dealing with them as he would with his own people, and by paying for all specimens brought in.

The greatest difficulty of all, Dr. Hrdlicka says, was to get normal, full-blooded natives. These are becoming scarce along the river, especially in the middle regions where the transition is most marked, and in a few years will have disappeared altogether, leaving only a mixed-blood population.

The living natives along the great waterway afford few clews to the ancient dead, their pioneer ancestors in this far northern land. These are likely to remain for years an inspiration to the imaginations of archeologists and to make Northern Alaska a great archeological hunting ground in the near future.

The existence of the high and rich fossil ivory culture, says Dr. Hrdlicka, is one more conclusive blow at the contentions of the still sometimes-encountered opinions that men originated in America, or came from some mythical "lost Atlantis," or crossed the Southern Pacific in their frail canoes. Here, he says, is an obvious proof of migrations into the New World of Asiatic peoples.

The "Ghost" that Made the Mountains Dry

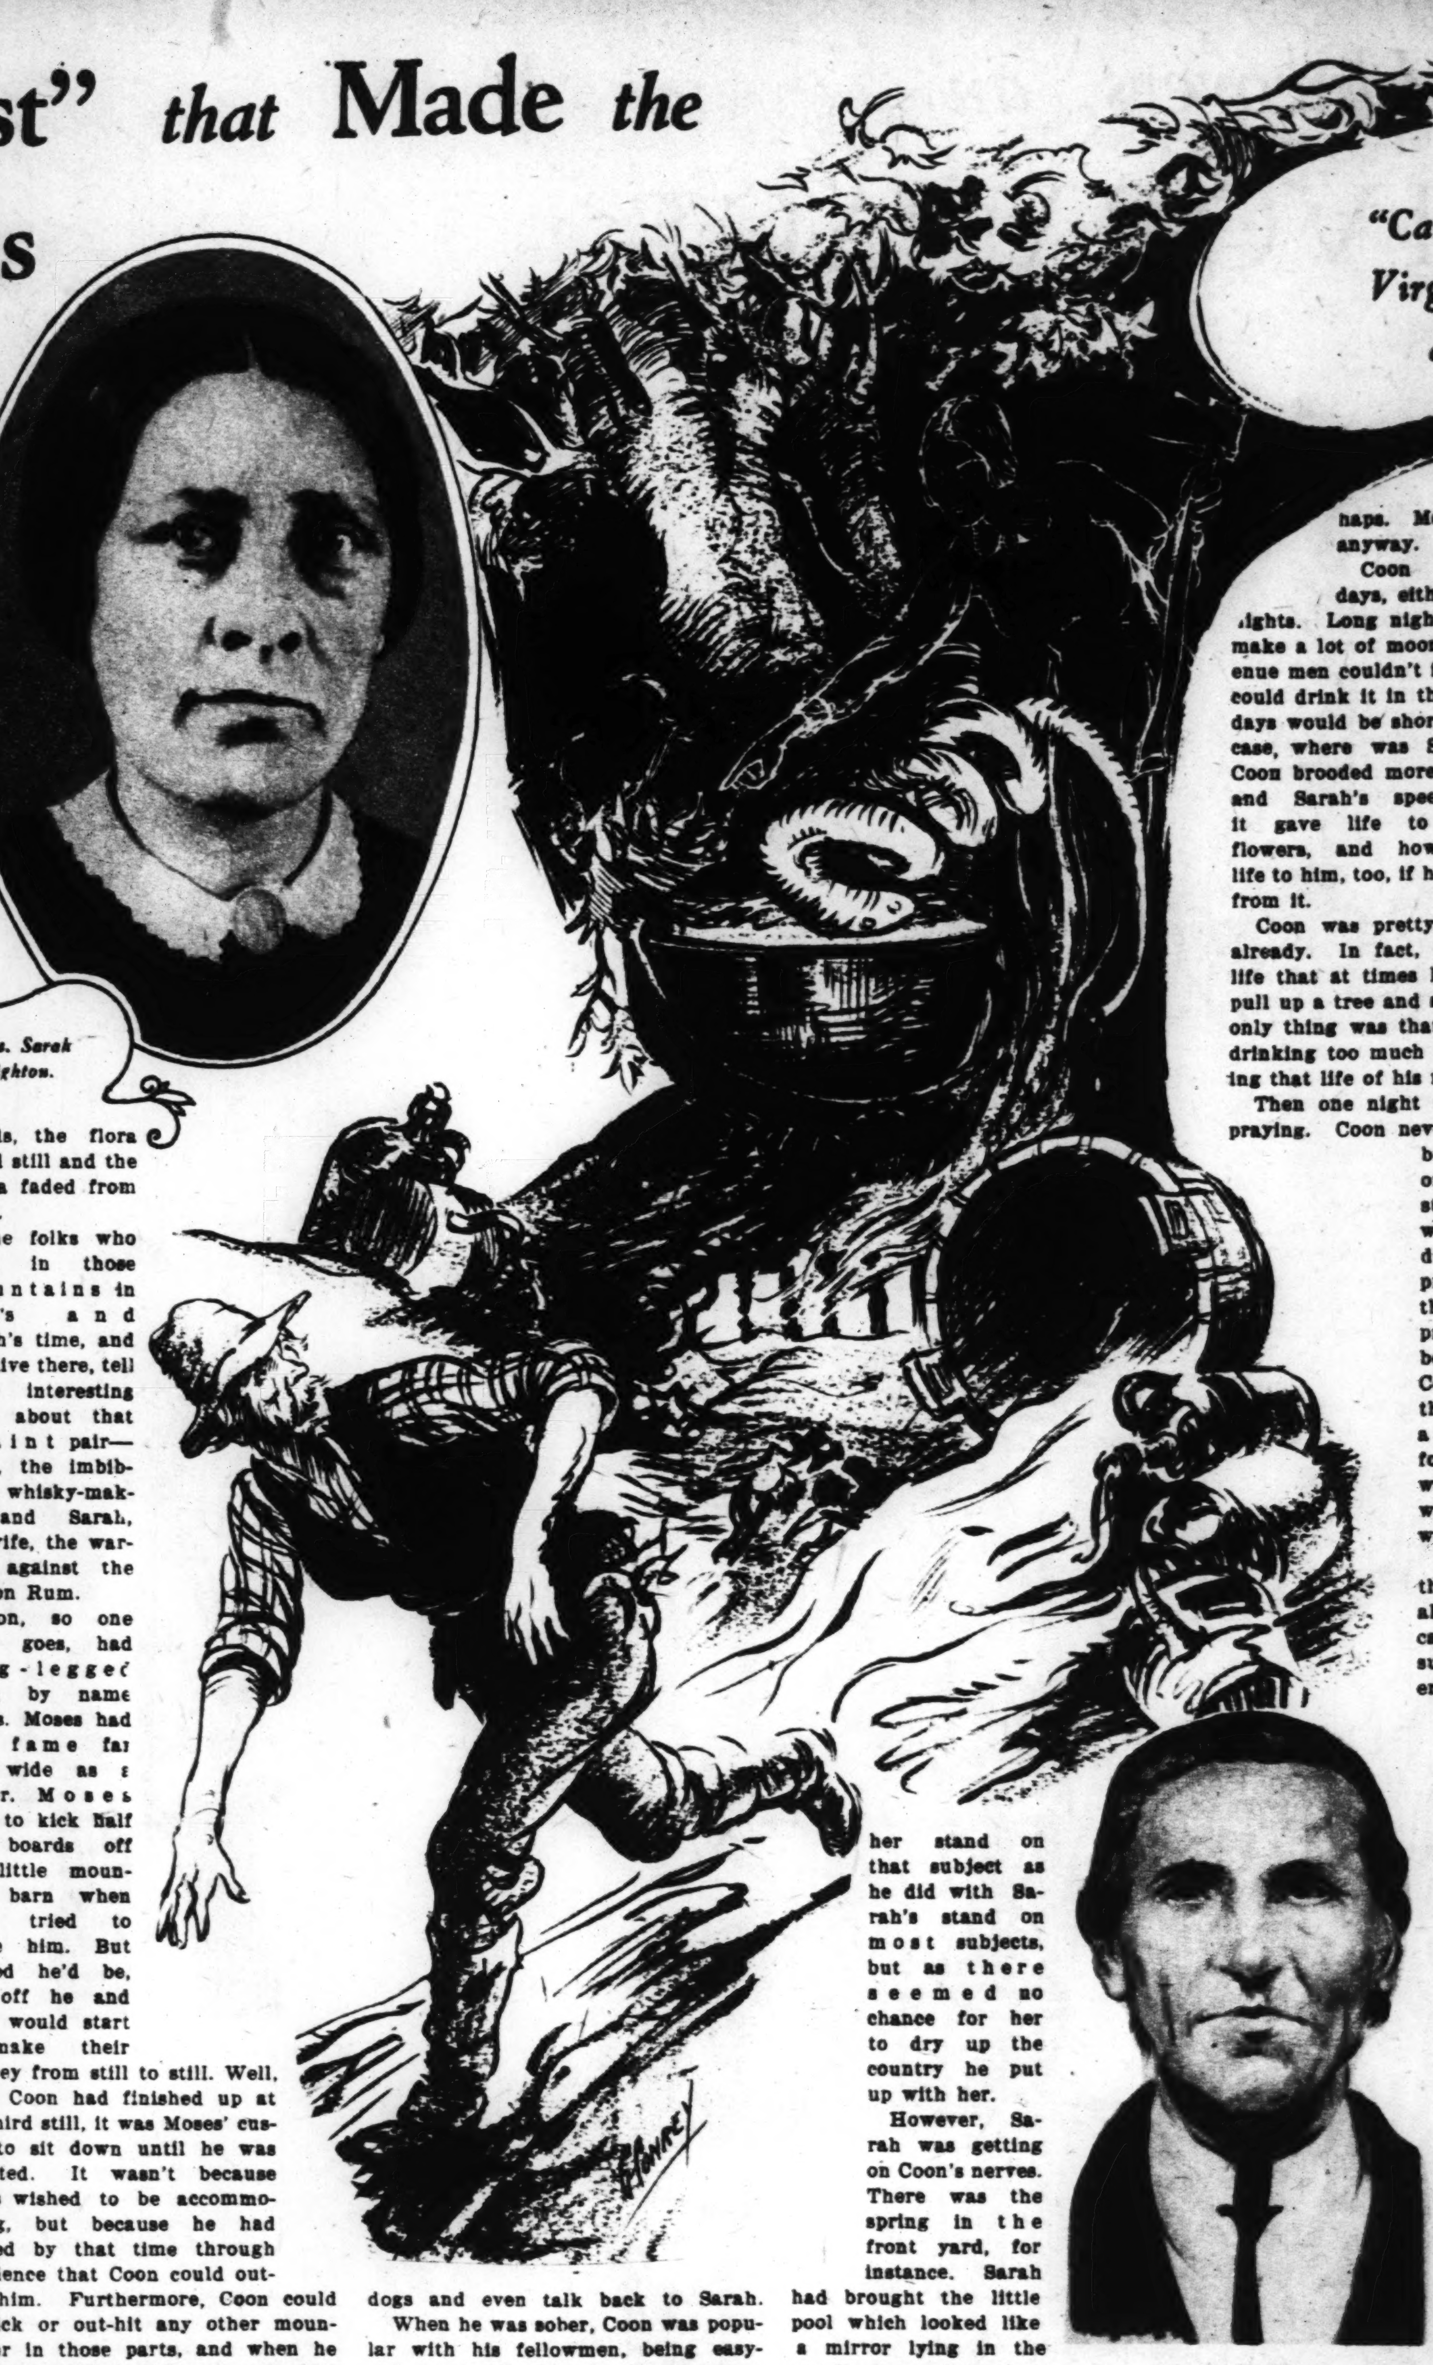
The "Carrie Nation of Madison County," Virginia—Frustrated in Life—Scores a Strange Post-Mortem Victory.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine



Mrs. Sarah Knighton.

"Coon" Knighton.

LURAY, Virginia. UP IN the mountains of Madison County, where moonshining is as old as the Bill of Rights and has always been considered a pleasant, profitable and honorable profession—up in those mountains, moonshining is no more! Madison County has gone dry for the first time in history. Is this because of the Volstead Act? Don't be silly! Is it perhaps because moonshiners in the city have cornered the market? Ridiculous. Business has been better than ever since the passing of the Eighteenth Amendment. Have the revenuers, the cossacks of the prohibition forces, been responsible? Nothing of the sort.

Instead, the stills, well hidden in rocky fastnesses, that once poured the warm corn licker into the waiting jug, have become cold, forlorn and deserted for no other reason than that the "ghost" of Sarah Knighton, the Carrie Nation of the mountains, has returned to stalk the region where murder was done to her. It is even contended by the moonshiners that she haunts the county roads, and fellows who brave the forces of the law as they pilot their loads of liquor through the countryside now take circuitous ways so they may journey far from the territory that the ghost of Sarah has taken for its own.

Sarah, foiled in her crusades on the Demon Rum in life, has come back, according to the mountaineers, to find victory in death. And though you may not believe in ghosts, gentle reader, you will find difficulty in converting the forthright moonshiners of Madison County to your heathenish beliefs. Sarah's soul may have passed from her flesh on that day 30 years ago when "Coon" Knighton, her husband, brought her to her end, but Sarah—well, Sarah, a little ethereal perhaps, is generally understood to have returned.

"COON" and Sarah were born up in those mountains, where wildcats romp about and rattlesnakes rattle in their fiendish glee. There Coon and Sarah went about their courtin' among the stills and streams, barefoot, carefree, blissful. Then marriage came, and it wasn't long before their home on the hill became divided within itself. For Coon, despite his marital connection with Sarah, was no teetotaler. He not only drank whisky, he made whisky and he wouldn't let Sarah say him nay.

Now, Sarah herself was no shrinking bit of femininity. While it is admitted that Coon got pretty darned cantankerous when he had sampled enough of his own liquor, and while it has been affirmed that Coon, when in that state, wouldn't have held back from spitting tobacco juice in a wildcat's eye, it is said that he wouldn't have been able to so challenge a wildcat if Sarah was around, because when Sarah appeared the wildcats disappeared. Somehow, 'tis said, when Sarah wandered about the mountain woods, the flora stood still and the fauna faded from view.

The folks who lived in those mountains in Coon's and Sarah's time, and still live there, tell some interesting tales about that quaint pair—Coon, the imbibing whisky-maker, and Sarah, his wife, the warrior against the Demon Rum.

Coon, so one story goes, had a long-legged mule, by name Moses. Moses had won fame far and wide as a kicker. Moses used to kick half the boards off the little mountain barn when Coon tried to bridle him. But bridled he'd be, and off he and Coon would start to make their journey from still to still. Well, when Coon had finished up at the third still, it was Moses' custom to sit down until he was mounted. It wasn't because Moses wished to be accommodating, but because he had learned by that time through experience that Coon could outkick him. Furthermore, Coon could out-kick or out-hit any other mountaineer in those parts, and when he was well fortified with mountain dew he would go riding over the stony paths on Moses, giving great shouts of delight and challenging bellows which sent the squirrels chattering to their holes and made the spitting of a lynx sound like a purr in comparison.

At such times old Coon admittedly wouldn't have been a safe playmate for a mad elephant. He would bite Moses' ears and lick his neighbors and shoot stray dogs and even talk back to Sarah.

When he was sober, Coon was popular with his fellowmen, being easygoing and affable and generous to a fault. He was nice to Sarah at such times, which caused her to be fond of him even despite his pranks when plastered.

Sarah was a very religious soul, and a woman who looked upon liquor as the greatest evil which could beset mankind. Over countless miles of real estate, which was mostly standing on end, she went during her lifetime, preaching far and wide the doctrine of sobriety. Coon disagreed with her stand on that subject as he did with Sarah's stand on most subjects, but as there seemed no chance for her to dry up the country he put up with her.

However, Sarah was getting on Coon's nerves. There was the spring in the front yard, for instance. Sarah had brought the little pool which looked like a mirror lying in the rough grass into her arguments enough lately for it to be tiresome.

"Look at this," she would say, holding up a pitcher of cool, clear water. "If you-all jest drunk this here what the good Lord 'tended, life would be sweet and yore days would be long."

Coon couldn't see that line about life being sweet, but he was convinced that his days would be long. Much too long. Coon didn't like water. It was all right for Moses, perhaps. Moses was a jackass, anyway.

Coon didn't like long days, either. He liked long nights. Long nights meant he could make a lot of moonshine and the revenue men couldn't find him. Then he could drink it in the daytime and the days would be short. That being the case, where was Sarah's argument? Coon brooded more about the spring, and Sarah's speeches about how it gave life to the grass and flowers, and how it would give life to him, too, if he would only drink from it.

Coon was pretty sure he had life already. In fact, he was so full of life that at times he was tempted to pull up a tree and switch Sarah. The only thing was that Sarah harped on drinking too much and she was making that life of his miserable.

Then one night Coon heard Sarah praying. Coon never prayed himself, but he had a sort of idea that Sarah stood in pretty well with the Lord—she did with the preacher who rode that circuit. Her prayers had always been all right with Coon before, but that night she was asking something for him. And it was something which Coon did not want.

Sarah was asking the Lord to dry up all the stills because they were such a bad influence on Coon. She didn't want anything for herself, she said, she just wanted to protect Coon and other slaves of the Demon Rum. She thanked the Lord for the spring in the yard, and asked Him to teach Coon to drink there and nowhere else.

Coon considered the matter that night and the next day he strode about the mountains looking for a wildcat to intimidate. Suppose the Lord answered Sarah's prayer? Coon shuddered. It was the first time he had ever shuddered, and he feared he was getting the miseries. He took a drink as he entered the clearing about his house.

As he took the bottle down from his mouth, Coon saw Sarah. She was getting a drink from the spring. She was down on her knees in front of the spring as though she were praying again. Coon shuddered once more—and took another drink. He had had a vision of himself kneeling in front of the spring—drinking WATER.

Coon decided to take summary action. He cat-footed along the path until he was right behind Sarah. She hadn't seen him. Coon reached down and put his hand on the back of her neck. Sarah, startled, tried to jump up, but Coon held on. He pushed her head into the bubbling spring and held it there. More bubbles than usual came from the spring. Sarah squirmed, but Coon kept Sarah's head in the spring, just the same.

After a while he lifted Sarah up from the spring and carried her into the house. He dried her face off and looked around. There was a pot of sauerkraut on the stove. Coon ate part of it, drank some more 'shine, and went to look for Moses.

Coon mounted and rode cross-legged until he reached the Sheriff's place. He told the Sheriff he had found his wife dead, apparently the victim of indigestion caused by eating too much kraut.

THE Sheriff decided to go back with him and look things over. The blue marks of Coon's fingers could be plainly seen on Sarah's neck, and while she had apparently eaten no kraut, her lungs were full of water. The upshot of it was that Coon was sent to the Virginia Penitentiary, but was released after serving ten years.

Sarah was murdered December 10, 1899. Coon got out of prison in 1909 and went back to his home on the side of the mountain.

But in the years that he lived there, there was one thing Coon never did. He never drank out of the spring. He would climb stumblingly far up the side of the mountain to get a cool draught of water. And there was another thing Coon never did. He never took another drink of moonshine. Then Coon went away and a few years ago he was reported dead.

In the meantime the Eighteenth Amendment had been enacted, but it had not changed the rules or the enthusiasm of moonshining in Madison County. Uncle Sam had employed many, many more "revenuers," but the paths that take them to the stills were as thorny as ever. They stayed and still stay pretty much away from those mountains.

But lately, lo and behold, Government agents discovered that the moonshiners had moved out bag and bottle from Madison County. At first the agents were amazed. Then they learned of Sarah's "ghost."

It seems that recently "Sarah" returned to the cabin. Near the cabin runs the trail that takes the moonshiners to town. First the horse of a moonshiner bolted one night and ran away. His cargo of 'shine was swept off by a limb and fell in the spring. When the moonshiner went to retrieve it, he saw Sarah standing behind a tree in the mooonlight. He fled and Sarah followed.

Since then Sarah has patrolled the trail nightly, the mountaineers say, with the result that horses carrying liquor repeatedly threw their masters and bolted away through the woods, losing their cargoes of contraband.

Ghost or no ghost, Sarah has won at least a temporary triumph.

moment can forget or ignore those obligations which bind him to a life of perpetual and unremitting service.

"Not only is he bound to offer the sublime sacrifice of the Mass, not only is he bound to the recital of the Sacred Liturgy every day, not only must he be prepared at all times to serve all those who on any ground demand his services, not only must he submit to many restrictions to which other men are not subject and forego many legitimate enjoyments to which others eagerly look forward, but, above all, if he be true to himself, he must cultivate and develop a personal profound sanctity which will make his inner life a sanctuary of his soul.

"He must guard with unremitting vigilance the sanctuary of his spirit and in the midst of labors which never end and responsibilities which are ever increasing he must still preserve the desire and the capacity to aim at ever-increasing heights of personal purity and sanctity.

"And when he has done all this he will still be conscious that he has been an unprofitable servant, he will know by the greater purity of soul that he attains that he falls infinitely short of that ideal to which he has consecrated his life."

Thus, in the foregoing, does Father O'Connell answer the question, "What made you become a priest?"

Despite the fact that the former noted solicitor was a man of the world, and in intimate contact with the leaders of the financial and industrial world, he has always been religious. Since his student days at Belvedere College, a Jesuit institution, he has been a zealous defender of his faith. Yet, there could be no better illustration of the man's liberalism than the fact that when the time came for him to complete his education, he enrolled himself as a student at a Protestant and intensely pro-British institution, Trinity College, Dublin. In this great school he took the degrees of both M. A. and LL. D.

ASIDE from his great interest in the law, and his activities in banking and railroading, he also found time for service as a member of the Senate of Trinity College and of the University College, Cork. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland; member of the Royal Irish Academy; vice-president of the Statistical and Social Enquiry Society of Ireland; member of the Board of Superintendence of Dublin Hospitals; Justice of the Peace of County Cork, and president of the Incorporated Law Society of Ireland. He was also chairman of the Association for the Housing of the Very Poor in Dublin.

For his work in furthering the cause of Catholicism he was awarded the Papal distinctions of Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory and Knight of the Grand Cross of the Order of the Sepulchre.

He has traveled widely, and his researches in the Holy Land have been acclaimed as of lasting historical and archeological value. He was in great demand through Great Britain and Ireland as a speaker. His addresses on philanthrophic and social subjects have earned for him the reputation of being one of the foremost thinkers of the time.

In his Trinity days he was rated as one of the best tennis players in Ireland. Even during his latter years he was frequently to be seen on the courts of exclusive athletic clubs.

And now all these distinctions, honors, associations and pleasures are behind him.

He is now a Black Monk of the Benedictine Order, and having taken the vows of "Stability, Conversion of Manners, and Obedience," will henceforth live a life so completely at variance with his former habits that he will be like a man in another world.

When he took his final vows a short time ago, he heard the words, "Let him be received on the condition of persevering until death."

BY the vow of "Stability," Father O'Connell attaches himself to the monastery at Downside Abbey, Somersetshire, England, and associates himself to the monastic family there existing, promising never to withdraw his neck from the regular observance of the worship of God, according to the rule of St. Benedict.

Through the vow of "Conversion of Manners," the famous legalist binds himself to assiduous and unmeasured labor at the reformation of his morals or habits, according to evangelical perfection, rejecting what is worldly and directing his actions according to the rule of St. Benedict.

When the distinguished advocate and British knight took the vow of "Obedience," he was without worldly goods of any kind, for personal poverty is the prime requisite for those making the profession. St. Benedict was absolutely uncompromising in the matter of personal poverty, ruling that no monk should ever have anything of his own. At profession a Black Monk must either distribute to the poor, or else by formal donation make over to the monastery, whatever he may possess, reserving nothing at all for himself.

The huge fortune of Sir John Robert O'Connell was distributed chiefly to the poor of Dublin, while a portion of it was given to the order of which he is now a priest.

The man whose annual income used to reach a staggering total is now as absolutely beggared as any of the down-and-out who sleep beneath the cold arches of London's Waterloo Bridge.

According to St. Benedict, private ownership was a vice to be cut out by the roots. On March 5 next, when Lent begins, Father O'Connell will draw up his "Bill of Poverty," being an accurate list of everything that he has for his use in any way, and present it to the Abbot of Downside Abbey, saying:

"These things and whatever I may have forgotten, together with myself, I resign to your paternal good will and esteem."

HIS earthly possessions will consist of two cowls or cloaks, two tunics, sandals and socks, girdle, knife, pen, needle, handkerchief and writing tablet. During the winter months he may have a pair of gaiters.

The year around he will rise at 3 o'clock in the morning, for vigils in the oratory, followed by prayers, meditations and fasts.

As he goes about his monastic duties he will follow the rule of "Silence." He may say no more than is expedient, for taciturnity is the watchword of the Benedictines.

Such is to be the future life of the one-time Sir John Robert O'Connell at Downside Abbey, until death releases him from the vows of "Stability, Conversion of Manners, and Obedience."

WHEN Alfred Cortot, the famous French pianist, visited St. Louis in November as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra, the Alliance Francaise gave a reception and luncheon in his honor. Cortot was called upon to speak, and after acknowledging the courtesies extended to him, surprised his hearers by devoting the rest of his remarks to earnest praise of a St. Louis musician whom Cortot declared to be one of the world's finest masters of the piano.

"I refer," Cortot said, "to Gottfried Galston, who has been living here for the past two years. I am surprised that his name seems unknown to most of you, for he has a great European reputation, not only as an artist and a teacher of piano playing, but also as a profound student and interpreter of the works of the masters.

For it is no exaggeration to say that Galston's coming to St. Louis marks a very important cultural gain for the city. His European reputation is solid and respected. He has been soloist with the great symphonies of the world. By special invitation he played at the Paris Conservatoire, a privilege for which artists usually have to make application, and to celebrate the occasion the Conservatoire struck off a special medal in his honor.

HIS "cycle concerts," in which he devoted an evening to the works of five great composers—an evening to each composer—were a sensation abroad before the war and were repeated by invitation in the great cities of Europe. He is the author of a scholarly analysis of the works of the masters, written and used as a guide for virtuosi. He was chosen to be soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra at the opening of Aeolian Hall in New York in 1912. A friend of some of the foremost musicians and composers of modern times, he was Busoni's most intimate companion during the last two years of the composer's life.

But what makes Galston most interesting is that his talents and interests are not exclusively musical. After Busoni's death Galston was probably the foremost bibliophile in the world of music. His personal library consisted of 7000 rare volumes and the sale of these books in Germany, before Galston came to America, was a notable event among collectors that year. He is familiar with a half-dozen languages, is a keen student of English literature and one of his most cherished possessions is a complete collection of the first editions of James Joyce. He is an ardent philatelist and has a collection of ten albums of rare stamps. He is an accomplished horseman and served more than three years with the Austrian cavalry. In Europe one of his great enthusiasms was mountain climbing, and he has to his credit conquests of some of the most difficult peaks in Switzerland and Austria.

Such, then, are the major interests of the man who came to St. Louis in 1927 to become head of the piano department of the Progressive Series Teachers' College in Clayton, a training school for teachers of the piano; a man whose light, except for a few persons, had remained hidden under the proverbial bushel until Cortot made him the object of his brief eulogy.

BORN in Vienna 49 years ago, Galston received his first musical instruction at the age of five. It was informal teaching, at the hands of a musically inclined governess who thought that piano playing should be part of a child's training. The lessons continued irregularly for a year and then one Sunday he went with his parents and his grandfather to the Prater in Vienna. Afterwards they went to a restaurant where a band was playing. The little boy listened to the music for a few minutes and then could contain himself no longer.

"That is in E flat major," said Gottfried, aged six.

"If it isn't," said the grandfather, "if you are just trying to be important, you will get a whipping when you get home."

Afterwards he asked the bandleader, and "E flat major" was the answer. The grandfather, who knew nothing about music, was greatly pleased at this. Thereafter he saw that Gottfried had regular lessons from a professional teacher and he paid for them himself.

The boy made splendid progress, but in time his absorption in music began to cause his parents alarm. The father, employed in a bank at a modest salary, wanted his son to enter some respected profession that would assure him a good living. Piano playing did not strike him as that sort of profession. Thus whenever Gottfried neglected his studies at the gymnasium (preparatory school) to spend long hours at the piano, he was severely disciplined.

"I really believe I became a pianist by opposition," says Galston. "For the more my parents opposed a musical career, the more determined I became to be a great pianist."

Finally, by the time he was ready to be graduated from the gymnasium, his ability and purpose were so pronounced that his parents were compelled to consent to a musical career. He passed his examination for the Vienna Conservatory with flying colors, and with Gabrilowitsch, Mark Hambourg and Richard Buhling as classmates, began his serious study of music.

He finished his studies there and for almost five years studied under the great Leschetizky, then known as the "Pope of the Piano." He then studied theory, counterpoint and composition under famous masters in Germany and made his debut in Leipsic in 1900 at the age of 20.

From then on his career was marked by a number of successes. He played throughout Europe and his Parisian debut was such as to inspire Cortot's remarks which already have been quoted. Then it was that he was invited to participate in the concerts of the Paris Conservatoire without even having made the customary application in writing, a formality with which Chopin and Liszt had to comply in their day. He received the honor of an appointment as professor of a higher class at the Stern Conservatory in Berlin, but had to give this up after several years because of demands for concerts. In 1907 he first gave his celebrated "cycle concerts," one each devoted to the works of Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt and Brahms. Each cycle consisted of five concerts and formed a historical review of the great piano compositions of the past two hundred years. It was these cycle concerts that firmly established Galston in the foremost ranks of modern pianists. They were performed in the leading cities of Europe over a period of seven years and not only received highly favorable press reviews but, what is perhaps more significant, received the enthusiastic praise of fellow pianists. During his Russian tour of 1910 Galston was made honorary Professor of the Imperial Conservatory in St. Petersburg, and in that same year published his "Studienbuch," an advanced analytical work for master pianists, which was well received and has gone into a second edition since the war.

In 1912-13 he made a world tour. He appeared as soloist with symphony orchestras in Paris under Colonne, Lamoureux and Messager; in London under Richter; in Berlin under Nikisch; in New York under Damrosch; in Chicago under Stock, and in San Francisco under Hadley.

THEN came the war, and in 1916 he enlisted as a private in the Austrian cavalry. He served three and a half years, until the war ended. He saw action in numerous major engagements, rose to the rank of Lieutenant and was decorated for exceptional valor in battle.

At the end of the war Galston married Alexandra Korsakoff, a Russian artist living in Germany, and he settled down in Berlin to make up the years the war had stolen from his music. It was during this period that he formed his close friendship with the aged Busoni and he gave another cycle, this time for forty recitals, in Germany.

Three years ago the directors of the Progressive Series Teachers' College decided to add to their faculty an outstanding pianist who would head their piano department and edit their advanced musical publications. For this they wanted a man who was not only a fine virtuoso, but also a sound scholar of music. They went to the famous pianist, Ignaz Friedman, and asked him if he knew of any such man, adding that they were willing to pay handsomely for the right person.

"You could not get a better man than Gottfried Galston," said Friedman, "provided you can induce him to give up Berlin."

It was Friedman who finally persuaded Galston to come to St. Louis. The liberal compensation was an important inducement, of course, because Galston had lost everything in the war and had since acquired a wife and two children to support. But of perhaps even greater influence on Galston was the picture Friedman painted of the possibilities of a musical renaissance in St. Louis which Galston's presence, Friedman thought, would be certain to stimulate. Galston consented to come. He sold all but 500 volumes of his valuable library and with his wife and children made the long move to St. Louis.

TO ENTER the home of the Galstons at 5233 Raymond avenue is to enter a corner of Bohemia where the work-a-day world is a thing of legend and only the values of art are real. On the first floor Galston has what he calls his "work-shop," two large rooms divided by a sliding door. The larger room is devoted to music; a grand concert piano, files and files of musical compositions, a glass-covered case containing plaster casts of the hands of famous pianists and numerous autographed pictures of celebrated musicians.

The two rooms might be said to reflect accurately the versatile character of Galston, for the other room is his study and library. Here the atmosphere is not of music but of books. They are everywhere in the room, bulging from the bookcases, on chairs and overflowing the desk. There will always be on hand the latest catalogues from booksellers, for Galston is a book collector not by choice but by inner compulsion. His favorite volumes, beautifully hand-bound and tooled, which he withheld from the sale of his library, he keeps under key, but at the least sign of interest on the part of a visitor the case is unlocked and the treasures are displayed to the accompaniment of Gal-

The WORLD'S HIGHEST SUSPENSION BRIDGE

Recently Completed Span Over the Royal Gorge Dedicated to Those "Whose Heart-beats Respond to the Grandeur of Nature."

Of the Post-Dispatch Staff

CANON CITY, Colo.

DEDICATED to those whose heart-beats respond to the grandeur of nature."

Thus reads an inscription on the world's highest suspension bridge, recently completed, which spans the famous Royal Gorge of the Arkansas River in Colorado, 12 miles from here. To the man of cynical turn of mind, the inscription might better read: "Dedicated to those who will pay a toll of seventy-five cents for the privilege of driving or walking over this bridge." However, one can't be cynical after looking at the bridge and the gorge—one a masterpiece of nature; the other a masterpiece of man.

The suspension bridge is exactly 1053 feet from the roadbed of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad. According to figures furnished by the Royal Gorge Bridge & Amusement Company, in charge of the construction of the bridge, the next highest structure of its kind is a bridge at Twin Falls, Idaho, which is 500 feet above the river, while the third highest, 480 feet, is at Pont-de-Caille, France.

Alongside the roadbed of the D. & R. G. W., under the suspension bridge, churns and eddies the Arkansas River, a thin ribbon of silver when viewed from the lofty elevation of the bridge. Also from the suspension bridge may be seen the famous hanging bridge of the Royal Gorge, where everybody from Billy Sunday, the evangelist, to John McGraw and his 1909 Giants, has had his picture taken. The hanging bridge was built where the bottom of the gorge was too narrow for both the railway roadbed and the river.

RESIDENTS of the peaceful little town of Canon City (peaceful since the convicts were brought under control) point with proverbial pride to the fact that the new suspension bridge is the longest one-span bridge west of the Mississippi, in addition to being the loftiest in the world. The length of the main span is 880 feet, and the length of the entire structure is 1200 feet, with a roadway 18 feet wide. The floor is of three-inch Oregon fir.

Four towers—two on each end—are 150 feet tall and are 75 feet above the floor of the bridge. Two cables support the bridge with a sag of one-fifteenth of the span. According to the engineers in charge, each cable contains 2100 No. 9 galvanized special steel wires. Each cable, composed of these wires, is nine inches in diameter. To the cables, at intervals of ten feet, are attached 1 1-8-inch steel rods. These are attached to the floor of the bridge.

The anchorage for each cable was made by excavating trenches four feet wide and 100 feet long. These trenches range from five feet deep, at the point where the cable enters this rock tunnel, to 25 feet deep. One hundred two-inch pipes, five feet long, were set at a depth of three feet into solid formation and fastened in by a hot sulphur process. The cables were attached to these pipes and the trench was then filled with concrete to the level of the original rock. The bridge, as it stands today, has a live load capacity of 1000 pounds per lineal foot.

It is a source of comfort to know these facts before walking or driving upon the bridge because, as one walks out and peers into the abyss below, one needs reassuring. Walking across the bridge, you get a sensation not unlike that experienced when you walk the bridge of a steamer. The weight of a few persons walking on the bridge, together with the stiff breeze that usually whips through the canon, causes the bridge to "buck" or sway perceptibly. To get the utmost out of the bucking of the bridge, one should look over the guard rails at the edge of the bridge, looking straight down for more than a thousand feet. A single look will relieve that tired feeling.

Speaking of the wind in the canon, the completion of the bridge offers a new mark at which intrepid aviators may shoot. Flying under the suspension bridge would be about the most difficult feat in the category of aviation stunts—not because of lack of room (there is plenty) but because of the peculiar wind currents in the canon.

Ute burying grounds in Royal Gorge Park. Several rock mounds marking graves may be seen under the trees.

IF YOU wish to break one of the rules posted prominently on the bridge you may throw a piece of paper off the bridge and study the air currents as the paper whirls and eddies out of sight. The paper will start down, go perhaps a hundred feet, and then may be caught in an upward current, and will come up again even higher than the bridge. Another cross-current may then whip the paper to the side of the gorge, where, perchance, it may stick in a granite crevasse.

Whether an airplane could buck the air currents successfully in the gorge is a question. Residents of Canon City say it can't be done, but that is what some St. Louisans said when an aviator announced he was going to fly under Eads Bridge.

Despite the long span across the gorge, there was little difficulty in placing the first wire across the canon. This was accomplished by lowering a steel cable from each side of the gorge with a man on each cable. The ends of the cable, dangling far below in the bottom of the canon, were clamped together and the cable was pulled to a horizontal position across the chasm.

I say it was done with "little difficulty," but I have personal knowledge of at least one who would not have been the first, or even second, to step forward when volunteers were called for the job of being lowered over the brink of the canon.

Hanging bridge in the gorge.

The suspension bridge is but one of a series of projects to develop the Royal Gorge as a scenic attraction for tourists.

Workmen are now putting in an incline railway just north of the suspension bridge. The railway is 1700 feet long. Passengers from the hanging bridge, in the bottom of the canon, will be carried to the top of the canon in cars which will have a capacity of 21 passengers. This project will be completed before next autumn.

On the south side of the suspension bridge, on a rocky promontory, has been constructed an observation pavilion which will house a powerful telescope. With this telescope one will almost be able to recognize the make and style of cars that travel up Pike's Peak, 35 miles away. The observation point is 1275 feet above the gorge.

The suspension bridge, and the projects under construction, are in Royal Gorge Park, property of Canon City. Within the park are located works of nature that would be outstanding if the Royal Gorge were not there to dwarf their grandeur. There is the famous Grape Creek, winding through Grape Creek canon, the majestic Temple canon and Telephone canon. Then there are the Ute burying grounds, located in the Park. The mounds which indicate the graves of Indian braves, long since gone to the Happy Hunting Grounds, are to be seen beneath the pines. Frequently bleached bones, arrow heads and the like are uncovered.

Great as the suspension bridge is, one cannot appreciate it fully unless the entire trip from Canon City and the gorge is visualized. The gorge is reached by automobile over a red-clay granite road which was built by convicts. The road winds through scrub pines, and for eight miles follows a course that was surveyed for a tram system that was to reach to the top of the gorge.

The suspension bridge crosses a chasm that has been described many times, but residents of this section say that no description is better than the one which appeared in a history of Southern Colorado, written in 1879. The description was from the pen of a Major Pangborn. It follows in part:

". . . . A drive of twelve miles brings us to the Grand Canon of the Arkansas. Disappointment is bitter, and feelings of resentment are almost beyond control, as nowhere can the eye discover the canon. In the immediate foreground the pinon growth is rank and dense; just beyond, great bleak ridges of bare cold rock contrast strongly with the profusion of foliage hiding everything beneath from sight, while in the distance the snow-crowned peaks of the continental divide are outlined sharp and clear against the solid blue of the morning sky.

"THOUGH the scene is grand beyond anything we have seen in amazing extent of vision, the mind is so wrapped up in the anticipation of full realization of the gloom and vastness and solemn grandeur of the canon as to resent almost angrily the apparent absence. A half-dozen steps from the clump of pinon trees and all thoughts of resentment, of disappointment and chagrin vanish, and a cry of absolute terror escapes us. At our very feet is the canon—another step would hurl us into eternity. . . . . The solemn stillness of death pervades the scene. Shuddering, we peer down the awful slopes; fascinated, we draw a little nearer to circumvent a very mountain that has rolled into the chasm, and at last the eye reaches down the sharp incline thousands of feet below to the bed of the impetuous Arkansas, forty to sixty feet in width, yet to us a mere ribbon of molten silver.

". . . . We crawl out upon tottering ledges to peer into sheer depths of untold ruggedness; we grasp with death-like clutch some overhanging limb and swing out upon a promontory beside which the apex of the highest cathedral spire in the world would be like a sapling in height."

Grace Greenwood, the Colorado writer, also went into a rhapsody of words in describing the gorge:

". . . . It is grander than the Yosemite, because of its color, which is everywhere dark, with rich porphyry tints. So awful is the chasm, so stupendous were the mountain steeps around it, so gloomy were the woods, so strange, and lonely, and savage and out of the world seemed the whole vast scene, that it recalled to me the passage in the 'Inferno':

"'There is a place within the depths of hell
Called Malebolge, all rock dark stained,
With hue ferruginous, e'en as the steep
That round it circling winds. Right in the midst
Of that abominable region yawns
A spacious gulf profound.'"

THE court read the verdict and the jury of Nebraska farmers shuffled self-consciously, as juries will which have decided a man's fate. But George St. Clair, the 22-year-old man in the defendant's chair, was smiling at the dictum which was sending him to prison for life, without hope of pardon or parole.

He had "beaten the chair" and that gave him time to repent of his crime. Not bad. He felt that he had cleverly bamboozled the court and jury, with his plea of insanity. His lawyer thought him insane. So did the jury. So did the public.

To newspaper reporters who flocked around the table he said: "I think I'm as smart as anyone now—" Then stopped and refused to talk further except to say that "you fellows have put too much in the papers already." If it came out that he was really smart, who could tell whether it might not spoil his victory?

The reporters had put a lot in the papers about George St. Clair. His murder of his wife, who was about to become a mother, had furnished plenty of copy. Especially his explanations of why he strangled her and buried her in a hurriedly-made grave in the sand hills. He had done it, he said, because he didn't want her to suffer the trials and privations of life and so she could go "direct to heaven" with the child, where, he had no doubt, they now looked down happily upon him. He was certain that his wife forgave the slow tightening of the wire noose that choked the life out of her body. In heaven that would make no difference. As for himself, he had repented.

One day in the fall, he walked into the office of Sheriff A. J. Salisbury, and with a becoming show of grief said that his wife had disappeared without leaving a note or clew of any kind. The Sheriff was sympathetic and told him to go home, that his deputies would look for the missing woman.

AFTER four days of search Salisbury turned his attention to St. Clair. He began to sense something suspicious. St. Clair was still the same grief-stricken husband when the apartment was searched but the discovery of his wife's clothes in a wardrobe scotched the desertion theory. Surely she would have taken her clothes along, Salisbury thought.

He put St. Clair in jail and talked with him from day to day for almost a month. Then the prisoner told the whole story.

WHAT next in this world of endurance contests? The strange story of a woman 87 years old who has attended motion-picture shows for 3500 consecutive nights—almost ten years—brought the correspondent to this town in west central Iowa. The world champion film fan is Mrs. Wilhelmina Alff. If you don't believe it, ask anyone here in Cherokee.

Whence came her strange hunch, or whatever it is that leads people to such Marathonic stunts? She was born in Germany, married there, and it was in the Fatherland that her first two children were born. Then she came with her husband to America. SLEW HIS WIFE so SHE COULD "GO to HEAVEN"

But George St. Clair Would Have Slept After His Crime as Well as Ever, Except That the Jail Beds Were Hard.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

NORTH PLATTE, Neb.

THE court read the verdict and the jury of Nebraska farmers shuffled self-consciously, as juries will which have decided a man's fate. But George St. Clair, the 22-year-old man in the defendant's chair, was smiling at the dictum which was sending him to prison for life, without hope of pardon or parole.

He had "beaten the chair" and that gave him time to repent of his crime. Not bad. He felt that he had cleverly bamboozled the court and jury, with his plea of insanity. His lawyer thought him insane. So did the jury. So did the public.

To newspaper reporters who flocked around the table he said: "I think I'm as smart as anyone now—" Then stopped and refused to talk further except to say that "you fellows have put too much in the papers already." If it came out that he was really smart, who could tell whether it might not spoil his victory?

The reporters had put a lot in the papers about George St. Clair. His murder of his wife, who was about to become a mother, had furnished plenty of copy. Especially his explanations of why he strangled her and buried her in a hurriedly-made grave in the sand hills. He had done it, he said, because he didn't want her to suffer the trials and privations of life and so she could go "direct to heaven" with the child, where, he had no doubt, they now looked down happily upon him. He was certain that his wife forgave the slow tightening of the wire noose that choked the life out of her body. In heaven that would make no difference. As for himself, he had repented.

One day in the fall, he walked into the office of Sheriff A. J. Salisbury, and with a becoming show of grief said that his wife had disappeared without leaving a note or clew of any kind. The Sheriff was sympathetic and told him to go home, that his deputies would look for the missing woman.

AFTER four days of search Salisbury turned his attention to St. Clair. He began to sense something suspicious. St. Clair was still the same grief-stricken husband when the apartment was searched but the discovery of his wife's clothes in a wardrobe scotched the desertion theory. Surely she would have taken her clothes along, Salisbury thought.

He put St. Clair in jail and talked with him from day to day for almost a month. Then the prisoner told the whole story.

Two days before he had made his false report he had murdered his wife, St. Clair related. He had planned it ever since she had told him of her prospective motherhood.

They were driving around North Platte in their second-hand, four-year-old touring car. St. Clair stopped long enough at a hardware store to purchase a shovel, which he tossed in the tonneau. Then they drove out toward the airport, where he parked along the highway. He told her he wanted to kiss her, which was true. He didn't want to kill her without kissing her good-bye, this trustful little wife whom he had met at a revival meeting and married because she "tried to live as God wanted her to live."

She was frightened and pulled away. Well, it would have to be done without that formality then. St. Clair reached for a piece of baling wire, threw it around her neck and garrotted her. Her body slowly relaxed and slumped down in the seat.

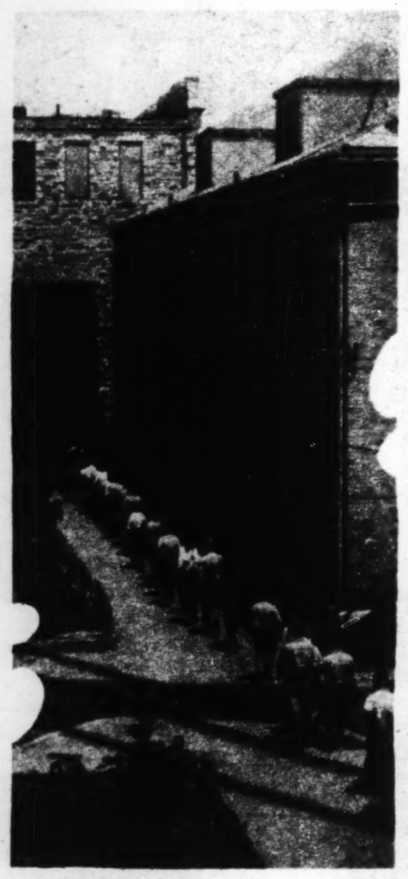
It had been one clever piece of work after another clear through, St. Clair thought, with the mind classified by an alienist as that of a 14-year-old boy.

With this mind, disordered by a form of religious fanaticism, he "solved" his troubles last September.

He worked in an ice plant and winter was coming on. St. Clair reflected that people did not use much ice in winter. Hence the plant would probably shut down considerably and someone would be let out before long. He was a common laborer and probably would be among the first to go.

OBVIOUSLY, he reasoned, it were a mercy to remove his wife from the danger of suffering from improper food and lack of warm clothes in the Nebraska winter. And sometime about midwinter her baby was due.

It looked easy. He would merely report her missing. St. Clair enjoyed a splendid reputation among his neighbors. He read his Bible regularly and could quote passages from memory. He was a studious and earnest young fellow with a countenance of unusually severe aspect; high of forehead and prominent of jaw. Black shell-rimmed glasses emphasized the dark, piercing appearance of his deep-set eyes.



View of the yard at the Nebraska State Prison in Lincoln.

He never swore and seldom smoked and he shunned liquor, except for an occasional drink of hard cider. He avoided the motion pictures, which he considered immoral; had attended only one show in his married life. There had been a trained-animal act which he had liked. The rest he didn't care for.

All things considered, people were unlikely to look upon George St. Clair suspiciously if he said his wife had disappeared. More likely they would nod and say something about the wayward tendencies of young wives, when St. Clair's back was turned.

Easy. It was a cinch. So few people had brains. Besides, his wife was a good woman and would go straight to heaven. So would the child, who was incapable of sin.

St. Clair got out and looked around. No one was in sight. He lifted the body of his wife from the front seat and placed it in back under the seat cushion. Then he got back at the wheel and began to drive. Toward the sand hills outside the city he drove leisurely, stopping at a filling station for gasoline and chatting with the attendant. It was getting dark and he pushed the car harder.

Twenty-three miles from town he stopped again and, walking a short distance out of sight of the road, began digging in the sand with his shiny new shovel. When he had dug a hole four feet deep he went back to the machine, pulled the body from under the seat, carried it back to the quickly-provided grave and covered it up. On the way home he tried to toss the shovel into the Platte River but it struck a railing and bounded back onto the bridge. He drove on home, stayed indoors all day Sunday planning how he would report the affair and went to see Sheriff Salisbury on Monday.

The shovel was found and used against him at the trial.

The Sheriff and his men were amazed at the unconcern shown by St. Clair as he waited for the trial to roll around. He played solitaire and checkers as if nothing unusual had happened and read his Bible daily. Even a visit from his wife's parents failed to ruffle his peace of mind. It was the first time they had met.

George St. Clair.

Mrs. June St. Clair.

"I can say that this thing hasn't bothered me one minute," he said, "except for the fact that I knew I couldn't explain to the world and the law why I had done it, if I were suspected.

"It hasn't hurt my conscience at all. I have slept as well as I ever slept before except that the beds in the jail are not as comfortable as some I have slept on. But aside from that, there has been no bother whatsoever on my mind since I killed her.

"I BELIEVE I did right by doing it. I believe I have put her and the baby into heaven. I believe they are saved, wishing me the best. I knew that it was wrong to kill my wife and that I would probably burn in hell. However, I knew that God was all-forgiving and that if I repented, I would be saved."

His indifference persisted throughout the trial. He looked and listened half-amusedly while doctors testified that he was abnormal mentally. This was the idea of his lawyer, who told the jury: "St. Clair became possessed with a feeling that his wife should not be subjected to the trials and tribulations of this earth. This became an obsession and he determined she should die. He worked himself into a state of mind where he believed he would square himself with God by sending his young wife to heaven."

"I do not believe St. Clair has been normal mentally since his birth," testified Dr. C. A. Young, Omaha brain specialist. "There is something wrong with him and he shows abnormal tendencies, although he was able to distinguish between right and wrong when he killed his wife. He has the mind of a child of about fourteen."

Dr. F. C. Heider, of North Platte, said: "Persons suffering from dementia praecox, as is the defendant, often show a keen type of intellect and St. Clair is intellectually keen. The extent of his mental abnormality cannot be told from short observation and only time will tell just how far his mind is diseased."

St. Clair has begun serving his life term in Nebraska State Penitentiary at Lincoln.

WENT to the MOVIES 3500 NIGHTS in SUCCESSION

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

CHEROKEE, Iowa.

WHAT next in this world of endurance contests? The strange story of a woman 87 years old who has attended motion-picture shows for 3500 consecutive nights—almost ten years—brought the correspondent to this town in west central Iowa. The world champion film fan is Mrs. Wilhelmina Alff. If you don't believe it, ask anyone here in Cherokee.

Whence came her strange hunch, or whatever it is that leads people to such Marathonic stunts? Well, in the first place, "Grandma" Alff, as they call her here, didn't have much fun when she was a younger woman. She was born in Germany, married there, and it was in the Fatherland that her first two children were born. Then she came with her husband to America. They settled on an Iowa farm and Mrs. Alff, in addition to bringing ten other children into the world, gave many years to that monotonous drudgery that only a German woman eking a living from the soil could endure. She milked cows, raised poultry and reared her children. There was no time for any relaxation or theatergoing—even if theaters had been available, which they were not; and even if Mrs. Alff could have afforded them, which she could not.

But about ten years ago, after all her children were grown, this good woman began to make up for lost time and lost pleasures. One day with one of her sons she was in Council Bluffs, shopping. When they finished, time began to hang a little heavily on their hands and he suggested a picture show.

She demurred at first, as she had never been to a movie and did not know what they were like. But he insisted and she went. It was the usual picture story, she recalls, although she can't remember the title; and when she came out of the theater she said:

"Why, there's nothing wrong about that. It isn't wicked—it's a good story and as true as life."

SO the next time she had the opportunity to see a motion picture she went with alacrity. Not quite a year later she came here to live with her daughter and her son-in-law, Max Drefke, at 223 East Maple street, Mr. Drefke incidentally owns both of this town's movie houses—the Empress and the Rialto. "Grandma" Alff, quite naturally, then began to make the most of her opportunities. She became a regular patron of the picture shows, went for a whole year and never missed a night. Rain, snow, or sleet did not stop her. She would finish supper promptly, put on her cap of black lace and silk, such as elderly women wear in Germany, pick up her shawl and set out for the movies. And night after night for 3500 consecutive nights she has repeated this. She was so regular in her attendance that neighbors would notice her pass by and set their clocks and the children would call out: "It's 7 o'clock; there goes Grandma Alff off to the movies."

In each of the theaters she had her regular seat and went alternately to one picture house or the other as their programs changed. Sometimes, as she reads English very slowly and so had difficulty in catching the thread of a picture play with too many subtitles, she will see the same picture twice on succeeding evenings.

The habit soon fastened itself on Mrs. Alff. Although she is a devout Christian and a member of the Trinity Lutheran Church here, she will not miss a picture show Sunday night.

"I have been criticised for going to the movies on Sunday," she admitted to the correspondent. "Ach, yes! People write me the letters that are not always kind, maybe. One came last week. It said: 'Do you ever your Bible read? If that is so then why it is you go to the picture shows on Sundays? It is to the church you should be going.'

"But it is not I who am a sinner. Do I not go to my church and worship God always on the Sabbath at the morning service? My children and grandchildren and my friends, they know I am not wicked. And I say to them always: 'There is gospel in the film shows. Do I not see such things as "The Ten Commandments" and "Ben Hur"? And where, I ask you, are there better sermons than that?'

"The picture shows are not bad. All have moral lessons. It is on the screen that I see life as it is lived. All over this world, I go when I see the moving pictures. I travel with them and they have given me an education—the learning I had no time for when my children were growing up. In these nine years or more every night at the picture shows I have visited every place in the world and even way back to the olden times. They take me over the sea—to the Old Country—to the big ice fields; to where grow the palm trees—to Russia, Japan, Germany, everywhere.

"And, ach, mein friend, it is good that it is so. I am so glad that before I die I can see so much."

Mrs. Alff was asked what pictures she likes best. She replied that she likes them all. She says she never saw a poor picture. "I always have loved the Talmadge sisters, and Colleen Moore, Billy Dove, Tom Mix, Hoot Gibson, Monty Blue, Kenneth Harlan and I think Emil Jannings is a genius."

"But doesn't watching the screen so much hurt your eyes?" I asked her. "One would think it would ruin your eyesight."

"I do not even wear glasses. The movies have never hurt me."

"GRANDMA" ALFF'S long record of attendance was broken last spring when she had an illness that kept her indoors. And recently she was missed for ten days when she went out into the country near Sioux City to visit a son on his farm. Hundreds of movie patrons asked where she was. Several said: "It just doesn't seem natural for her seat to be vacant."

I inquired carefully about the record of 3500 consecutive nights of movie-going that Cherokee claims for her. Paul H. Caswell, managing editor of the Cherokee Daily Times and the Cherokee Chief said:

"This newspaper knows Mrs. Wilhelmina Alff as the record-breaking movie fan."

Mr. Drefke said:

"It is true that Mrs. Alff has attended the movies regularly without missing a night for more than nine years. We change our programs three or four times a week. Mrs. Alff enjoys seeing a picture through the second night even more than the first. She always attends the Sunday shows."

Clarita Matlingly said:

"When we neighbors see Grandma Alff start out every night at 7 o'clock for the movies, we set our clocks by her, so regular is she in leaving her home. And the coming of the talkies hasn't affected her."

One day, Mrs. Drefke, the daughter, asked Mrs. Alff if she didn't get tired of the movies and want to stay at home. She replied:

"No, the evening would be too long."

"But we would entertain you," it was suggested.

"You might entertain me, but not so well as the pictures do. This picture I'm going to see tonight must have cost a million dollars to make. I must not miss it. Besides, after I come home from the picture show it is so much better I can sleep."

So what are you going to do in a case like that? Hollywood has a real friend here in Iowa.

PORCELAIN CUPS

By
James Branch Cabell

OH, BUT they are beyond praise," said Cynthia Allonby, enraptured, "and certainly you should have presented them to the Queen."

"Her Majesty already possesses a cup of that ware," replied Lord Pevensey. "It was one of her New Year's gifts, from Robert Cecil. Hers is, I believe, not quite so fine as either of yours; but then, they tell me, there is not the like of this pair in England, nor, indeed, on the hither side of Cataia."

He set the two pieces of Chinese pottery upon the shelves in the south corner of the room. These cups were of that sea-green tint called celadon, with a very wonderful glow and radiance. Such oddities were the last vogue at court in this year of grace 1593; and Cynthia could not but speculate as to what monstrous sum Lord Pevensey had paid for this, his last gift to her.

Now he turned, smiling, a really superb creature in his blue and gold. "I had another message from the Queen"——

"George," Cynthia said, with fond concern, "it frightens me to see you thus foolhardy, in tempting alike the Queen's anger and the plague."

"Eh, as goes the plague, it spares nine out of ten," he answered lightly. "The Queen, I grant you, is another pair of sleeves, for an irritated Tudor spares nobody."

But Cynthia Allonby kept silence, and did not exactly smile, while she appraised her famous young kinsman. She was flattered by, and a little afraid of, the gay self-confidence which led anybody to take such chances. Two weeks ago it was that the painted, terrible old Queen had named Lord Pevensey to go straightway into France, where, rumor had it, King Henri was preparing to renounce the Reformed Religion, and making his peace with the Pope; and for two weeks Pevensey had lingered, on one pretense or another, at his house in London, with the plague creeping about the city like an invisible, incalculable flame, and the Queen asking questions at Windsor. Of all the monarchs that had ever reigned in England, Elisabeth was the least used to having her orders disregarded. Meanwhile, Lord Pevensey came every day to the Marquis of Falmouth's lodgings at Deptford; and every day Lord Pevensey pointed out to the Marquis' daughter that Pevensey, whose wife had died a year back, did not intend to go into France, for nobody could foretell how long a stay, as a widower. Certainly it was all very flattering. . . .

"YES, and you would be an excellent match," said Cynthia aloud, "if that were all. And yet, what must I reasonably expect in marrying, sir, the famous Earl of Pevensey?"

"A great deal of love and petting, my dear. And if there were anything to which you had a fancy, I would get it for you."

Her glance went to those lovely cups and lingered fondly. "Yes, dear Master Generosity, if it could be purchased or manufactured, you would get it for me"——

"If it exists I will get it for you," he declared.

"I think that it exists. But I am not learned enough to know what it is. George, if I married you I would have money and fine clothes and soft hours and many lackeys to wait on me, and honor from all men. And you would be kind to me, I know, when you returned from the day's work at Windsor—or Holyrood or the Louvre. But do you not see that I would always be to you only a rather costly luxury, like those cups, which the Queen's Minister could afford to keep for his hours of leisure?"

He answered: "You are all in all to me. You know it. Oh, very well do you know and abuse your power, you adorable and lovely baggage, who have kept me dancing attendance for a fortnight, without ever giving me an honest yes or no." He gesticulated. "Well, but life is very dull in Deptford village, and it amuses you to twist a Queen's adviser around your finger! I see it plainly, you minx, and I acquiesce because it delights me to give you pleasure, even at the cost of some dignity. Yet I may no longer shirk the Queen's business—no, not even to amuse you, my dear."

"You said you had heard from her—again?"

"I had this morning my orders, under Glorianna's own fair hand, either to depart tomorrow into France or else to come tomorrow to Windsor. I need not say that in the circumstances I consider France the more wholesome."

Now the girl's voice was hurt and wistful. "So, for the thousandth time, is it proven the Queen's business means more to you than I do."

He observed, unruffled: "My dear, I scent unreason. This is a high matter. If the French King compounds with Rome, it means war for Protestant England. Even you must see that."

She replied sadly: "Yes, even I! Oh, certainly, my Lord, even a half-witted child of 17 can perceive as much as that."

"I was not speaking of half-witted persons, as I remember. Well, it chances that I am honored by the friendship of our gallant Bearnais, and am supposed to have some claim upon him, thanks to my good fortune last year in saving his life from the assassin Barriere. It chances that I may perhaps become, under providence, the instrument of preserving my fellow countrymen from much grief and trumpet-sounding and throat-cutting. Instead of pursuing that chance two weeks ago—as was my duty—I have dangled at your apronstrings in the vain hope of softening the most variable and hardest heart in the world. Now, clearly, I have not the right to do that any longer."

She admired the ennobled, the slightly rapt look which, she knew, denoted that George Bulmer was doing his duty as he saw it, even in her disappointment. "No, you have not the right. You are wedded to your statecraft, to your patriotism, to your self-advancement, or christen it what you will. You are wedded, at all events, to your man's business. You have not the time for such trifles as giving a maid that foolish and lovely sort of wooing to which every maid looks forward in her heart of hearts. Indeed, when you married the first time it was a kind of infidelity; and I am certain that poor, dear, mouse-like Mary must have felt that over and over again. Why, do you not see, George, even now that your wife will always come second to your real love?"

"IN MY heart, dear sophist, you will always come first. But it is not permitted that any loyal gentleman devote every hour of his life to sighing and making sonnets, and to the general solacing of a maid's loneliness in this dull little Deptford."

"All this is but another way of saying your lordship would have us cups upon a shelf," she pointed out, "in readiness for your leisure."

He shrugged, said "Nonsense!" and began more lightly to talk of other matters. Thus and thus he would do in France, such and such trinkets he would fetch back—"as toys for the most whimsical, the loveliest and the most obstinate child in all the world," he phrased it. And they would be married, Pevensey declared, in September; nor (he gaily said) did he propose to have any further argument about it. Children should be seen—the proverb was dusty, but it particularly applied to pretty children.

Cynthia let him talk. She was just a little afraid of his self-confidence, and of his tall nobleman's habit of getting what he wanted, in the end; but she dispiritedly felt that Pevensey had failed her. He treated her as a silly infant; and his want of her, even in that capacity, was a secondary matter; he was going into France, for all his petting talk, and was leaving her to shift as she best might, until he could spare the time to resume his love-making. . . .

Now when Pevensey had gone the room seemed darkened by the withdrawal of so much magnificence. Cynthia watched from the window as the tall earl rode away, with three handsomely-clad retainers. Yes, George was very fine and admirable, no doubt of it; even so, there was relief in the reflection that for a month or two she was rid of him.

TURNING, she faced a lean, disheveled man, who stood by the Magdalen tapestry scratching his chin. He had unquiet bright eyes, this out-at-elbows poet whom a marquis' daughter was pleased to patronize, and his red hair today was unpardonably puzzled. Nor were his manners beyond reproach, for now, without saying anything, he, too, went to the window. He dragged one foot a little as he walked.

"So my Lord Pevensey departs! Look how he rides in triumph! like lame Tamburlaine, with Techelles and Usumcasans and Theridamas to attend him, and with the sunset turning the dust raised by their horses' hoofs into a sort of golden haze about them. It is a beautiful world. And truly, Mistress Cyn," the poet said, reflectively, "that Pevensey is a very splendid ephemera. If not a king himself, at least he goes magnificently to settle the affairs of kings. Were modesty not my failing, Mistress Cyn, I would acclaim you as strangely lucky, in being beloved by two fine fellows that have not their like in England."

"Truly, you are not always thus modest, Kit Marlowe—"

"But, Lord, how seriously Pevensey takes it all! and himself in particular! Why, there departs from us, in befitting state, a personage whose opinion as to every topic in the world is written legibly in the carriage of those fine shoulders, even when seen from behind. And in not one syllable do any of these opinions differ from the opinions of his great-great-grandfathers. Oho, and hark to Deptford! now all the oafs in the Corn-market are cheering this bulwark of Protestant England, this rising young hero of a people with no nonsense about them. Yes, it is a very quaint and rather splendid ephemera."

A marquis' daughter could not quite approve of the way in which this shoemaker's son, however talented, railed at his betters. "Pevensey will be the greatest man in these kingdoms some day. Indeed, Kit Marlowe, there are those who say he is that much already."

"Oh, very probably! Still, I am puzzled by human greatness. A century hence what will he matter, this Pevensey? His ascent and his declension will have been completed, and his foolish battles and treaties will have given place to other foolish battles and treaties, and oblivion will have swallowed this glistening bluebottle, plumes and fine lace and stately ruff and all. Why, he is but an adviser to the queen of half an island, whereas my Tamburlaine was lord of all the golden ancient East; and what does my Tamburlaine matter now, save that he gave Kit Marlowe the subject of a drama? Hah, softly though! for does even that very greatly matter? Who really cares today about what scratches were made upon wax by that old Euripides, the latchet of whose sandals I am not worthy to unloose? No, not quite worthy, as yet!"

And thereupon the shabby fellow sat down in the tall leather-covered chair which Pevensey had just vacated; and this Marlowe nodded his flaming head portentously. He touched the breast of a weather-beaten doublet. He gave her that queer twisted sort of smile which the girl could not but find attractive, somehow.

He said: "Why, but this heart thumping here inside me may stop any moment like a broken clock. Here is Euripides writing better than I; and here in my body, under my hand, is the mechanism upon which depend all those masterpieces that are to blot the Athenian from the reckoning, and I have no control of it!"

"INDEED, I fear that you control few things," she told him, "and that least of all do you control your taste for taverns and bad women. Oh, I hear tales of you!" And Cynthia raised a reproving forefinger.

"True tales, no doubt." He shrugged. "Lacking the moon he vainly cried for, the child learns to content himself with a penny whistle."

"Ah, but the moon is far away," the girl said, smiling—"too far to hear the sound of human crying; and besides, the moon, as I remember it, was never a very amorous goddess—"

"Just so," he answered; "also she was called Cynthia, and she, too, was beautiful."

"Yet is it the heart that cries to me, my poet?" she asked him, softly, "or just the lips?"

"Oh, both of them, most beautiful and inaccessible of goddesses." Then Marlowe leaned toward her, laughing and shaking that disreputable red head. "Still, you are very foolish, in your latest incarnation, to be wasting your rays upon carpet earls who will not outwear a century. Were modesty not my failing, I repeat, I could name somebody who will last longer. Yes, and—if but I lacked that plaguey virtue—I would advise you to go a-gypsying with that nameless somebody, so that two manikins might snatch their little share of the big things that are eternal, just as the butterfly fares intrepidly and joyously, with the sun for his torchbearer, through a universe wherein thought cannot estimate the unimportance of a butterfly, and wherein not even the chaste moon is very important.

"YES, certainly I would advise you to have done with this vanity of courts and masques, of satins and fans and fiddles, this dallying with tinsels and bright vapors; and very movingly I would exhort you to seek out Arcadia, traveling hand in hand with that still nameless somebody." And of a sudden the restless man began to sing.

Sang Kit Marlowe:

"Come live with me and be my

And we will all the pleasures

Woods or steepy mountain

"And we will sit upon the rocks
And see the shepherds feed

But the girl shook her small, wise head decisively. "That is all very fine, but as it happens there is no such place as this Arcadia, where people can frolic in perpetual sunlight the year round, and find their food and clothing miraculously provided. No, nor can you, I am afraid, give me what all maids really, in their heart of hearts, desire far more than any sugar-candy Arcadia. Oh, as I have so often told you, Kit, I think you love no woman. You love words. And your seraglio is tenanted by very beautiful words, I grant you, though there is no longer any Sestos builded of agate and crystal, either, Kit Marlowe. For, as you may perceive, sir, I have read all that lovely poem you left with me—"

She saw how interested he was, saw how he almost smirked. "Ah, so you think it not quite bad, eh, the conclusion of my 'Hero and Leander'?"

"It is your best. And your middlemost, my poet, is better than aught else in English," she said politely, and knowing how much he delighted to hear such remarks.

"Come, I retract my charge of foolishness, for you are plainly a wench of rare discrimination. And yet you say I do not love you!"

"And I wonder how much of these ardors," she thought, "is kindled by my praise of his verses?" She bit her lip, and she regarded him with a hint of sadness. She said, aloud: "But I did not, after all, speak to Lord Pevensey concerning the printing of your poem. Instead, I burned your 'Hero and Leander'."

She saw him jump, as under a whip-lash. Then he smiled again, in that wry fashion of his. "I lament the loss to letters, for it was my only copy. But you knew that."

"Yes, Kit, I knew it was your only copy."

Oho! and for what reason did you burn it, may one ask?"

"I thought you loved it more than you loved me. It was my rival, I thought—" The girl was conscious of remorse, and yet it was remorse commingled with a mounting joy.

"And so you thought a jingle scribbled upon a bit of paper could be your rival with me!"

THEN Cynthia no longer doubted, but gave a joyous little sobbing laugh, for the love of her disreputable dear poet was sustaining the stringent testing she had devised. She touched his freckled hand caressingly, and her face was as no man had ever seen it, and her voice, too, caressed him.

"Ah, you have made me the happiest of women, Kit! Kit, I am almost disappointed in you, though, that you did not grieve more for the loss of that beautiful poem."

His smiling did not waver; yet the lean, red-haired man stayed motionless. "Do I appear perturbed?" he said. "Why, but see how lightly I take the destruction of my life-work in this, my masterpiece! For I can assure you it was a masterpiece, the fruit of two years' toil and of much loving repolishment—"

"Ah, but you love me better than such matters, do you not?" she asked him, tenderly. "Kit Marlowe, I adore you! Sweetheart, do you not understand that a woman wants to be loved utterly and entirely? She wants no rivals, not even paper rivals. And so often when you talked of poetry I have felt lonely and chilled and far away from you, and I have been half envious, dear, of your Heroes and your Helens, and your other good-for-nothing Greek minxes. But now I do not mind them at all. And I will make amends, quite prodigal amends, for my naughty jealousy; and my poet shall write me some more lovely poems, so he shall—"

He said, "You fool!"

And she drew away from him, for he was no longer smiling.

"You burned my 'Hero and Leander'! You! you big-eyed fool! You lisping idiot! You wriggling, cuddling worm! had not even you the wit to perceive it was immortal beauty which would have lived long after you and I? And you, a half-witted animal, a shining, chattering parrot, lay claws to it!" Marlowe had risen in a sort of seizure, in a condition which was really quite unreasonable when you considered that only a poem was at stake, even a rather long poem.

AND Cynthia began to smile, with tremulous hurt-looking young lips. "So my poet's love is very much the same as Pevensey's love! And I was right, after all."

"What do you care for my ideals? What do you care for the ideals of that tall earl whom you have held from his proper business for a fortnight? or for the ideals of any man alive? Why, not one thread of that dark hair, not one snap of those white little fingers, except when ideals irritate you by distracting a man's attention from Cynthia Allonby. Otherwise, he is welcome enough to play with his incomprehensible toys."

He jerked a thumb toward the shelves behind him.

"Oho, you virtuous pretty ladies! what all you value is such matters as those cups; they please the eye, they are worth sound money, and people envy you the possession of them. So you cherish your shiny mud cups, and you burn my 'Hero and Leander'; and I declaim all this dull nonsense, over the ashes of my ruined dreams, thinking at bottom of how pretty you are, and of how much I would like to kiss you. That is the real tragedy, the immortal tragedy, that I should still hanker after you, Cynthia—"

His voice dwelt tenderly upon her name. His fever-haunted eyes were tender, too, for just a moment. Then he grimaced.

"No, I am wrong—the tragedy strikes deeper. The root of it is that there is in you and in all your glittering kind no malice, no will to do harm nor to hurt anything, but just a bland and invincible and, upon the whole, a well-meaning stupidity, informing a bright and soft and delicately scented animal. So you work ruin among those men who serve ideals, not fore-planning ruin, not desiring to ruin anything, not even having sufficient wit to perceive the ruin when it is accomplished. You are, when all is done, not even detestable, not even a worthy peg whereon to hang denunicatory sonnets, you shallow-pated pretty creatures whom poets — oh, and in youth all men are poets!—whom poets, now and always, are doomed to hanker after to the detriment of their poesy. So in logic I must retract all my harsh words; and I must, without any hint of reproach, endeavor to bid you a somewhat more civil farewell."

She had regarded him, throughout this preposterous and uncalled-for harangue, with sad composure, with a forgiving pity. Now she asked him, very quietly, "Where are you going, Kit?"

"To the Golden Hind, O gentle, patient and unjustly persecuted virgin martyr!" he answered, with an exaggerated bow — "since that is the part in which you now elect to posture."

"Not to that low, vile place again!"

"But certainly I intend in that tavern to get tipsy as quickly as possible: for then the first woman I see will for the time become the woman whom I desire, and who exists nowhere." And with that the red-haired man departed, limping and singing as he went to look for a trull in a pothouse.

She sat quite still when Marlowe had gone.

"HE WILL get drunk again," she thought despondently. "Well, why should it matter to me if he does, after all that outrageous ranting? He has been unforgivably insulting—Oh, but none the less, I do not want to have him babbling of the roses and gold of that impossible fairy world which the poor, frantic child really believes in, to some painted woman of the town who will laugh at him. I loathe the thought of her laughing at him—and kissing him! His notions are wild foolishness; but I at least wish that they were not foolishness, and that hateful woman will not care one way or the other."

So Cynthia sighed, and to comfort her forlorn condition fetched a hand-mirror from the shelves whereon glowed her green cups. She touched each cup caressingly in passing; and that which she found in the mirror, too, she regarded not unappreciatively, from varying angles. . . .

Yes, after all, dark hair and a pale skin had their advantages at a court where pink and yellow women were so much the fashion as to be common. Men remembered you more distinctively. Though nobody cared for men, in view of their unreasonable behavior and their absolute self-centeredness. . . .

Still, there was a queer pleasure in being wooed by Kit; his insane notions went to one's head like wine. She would send Meg for him again tomorrow. And Pevensey was, of course, the best match imaginable. . . . No, it would be too heartless to dismiss George Bulmer outright. It was unreasonable of him to desert her because a Gascon threatened to go to mass; but, after all, she would probably marry George in the end. He was really almost unendurably silly, though, about England and freedom and religion, and right and wrong things like that. Yes, it would be tedious to have a husband who often talked to you as though he were addressing a public meeting. . . .

But now the sun had set and the room was growing quite dark. So Cynthia stood a-tiptoe, and replaced the mirror upon the shelves, setting it upright behind those wonderful green cups which had anew reminded her of Pevensey's wealth and generosity. She smiled a little, to think what fun it had been to hold George back, for two whole weeks, from discharging that old Queen's stupid errands.

THE door opened. Stalwart young Captain Edward Musgrave came with a lighted candle, which he placed carefully upon the table in the room's center.

He said: "They told me you were here. I come from London. I bring news for you."

"You bring no pleasant tidings, I fear"——

"As Lord Pevensey rode through the Strand this afternoon, on his way home, the plague smote him. That is my sad news."

"Ah," Cynthia said, very quiet, "so Pevensey is dead. But the plague kills quickly!"

"Yes, yes, that is a comfort, certainly. Yes, he turned quite black in the face, they report, and before his men could reach him had fallen from his horse. It was all over almost instantly. I saw him afterward, hardly a pleasant sight. I came to you as soon as I could. I was vexatiously detained—"

"So George Bulmer is dead, in a London gutter! It seems strange, because he was here, befriended by monarchs, and very strong and handsome, and self-confident, hardly two hours ago. Is that his blood upon your sleeve?"

"But of course not! I told you I was vexatiously detained, almost at your gates. Yes, I had the ill luck to blunder into a disgusting business. The two rapscallions tumbled out of a doorway under my horse's very nose, egad! It was a near thing I did not ride them down. So I stopped, naturally. I regretted stopping, afterward, for I was too late to be of help. It was at the Golden Hind, of course. Something really ought to be done about that place. Yes, and that rogue Marler bled all over a new doublet, as you see.

"And the Deptford Constables held me with their foolish interrogatories—"

"So one of the fighting men was named Marlowe! Is he dead, too, dead in another gutter?"

"Marlowe or Marler, or something of the sort — wrote plays and sonnets and such stuff, they tell me. I do not know anything about him—though, I give you my word now, those greasy Constables treated me as though I were a noted frequenter of pot-houses. That sort of thing is most annoying. At all events, he was drunk as David's sow, and squabbling over, saving your presence, a woman of the sort one looks to find in that abominable hole. And so, as I was saying, this other drunken rascal dug a knife into him—"

But now, to Captain Musgrave's discomfort, Cynthia had begun to weep heartbrokenly.

So he cleared his throat, and he patted the back of her hand. "It is a great shock to you, naturally—oh, most naturally, and does you great credit. But come now, Pevensey is gone, as we must all go some day, and our tears cannot bring him back, my dear."

"Oh, Ned, but people are so cruel! People will be saying that it was I who kept poor Cousin George in London this past two weeks, and that but for me he would have been in France long ago. And then the Queen, Ned!—why, that pig-headed old woman will be blaming it on me, that there is nobody to prevent that detestable French King from turning Catholic, and dragging England into new wars, and I shall not be able to go to any of the court dances! or to the masque!" sobbed Cynthia, "nor anywhere."

"NOW you talk tender-hearted and angelic nonsense. It is noble of you to feel that way, of course. But Pevensey did not take proper care of himself, and that is all there is to it. Now I have remained in London since the plague's outbreak. I stayed with my regiment, naturally. We have had a few deaths, of course. People die everywhere. But the plague has never bothered me. And why has it never bothered me? Simply because I was sensible, took the pains to consult an astrologer, and by his advice wear about my neck, night and day, a bag of dried toad's blood and powdered cinnamon. It is an infallible specific for men born in February. No, not for a moment do I wish to speak harshly of the dead, but sensible persons cannot but consider Lord Pevensey's death to have been caused by his own carelessness."

"Now, certainly that is true," the girl said, brightening. "It was really his own carelessness, and his dear, lovable rashness. And somebody could explain it to the Queen. Besides, I often think that wars are good for the public spirit of a nation, and bring out its true manhood. But then it upset me, too, a little, Ned, to hear about this Marlowe—for I must tell you that I knew the poor man, very slightly. So I happen to know that today he flung off in a rage, and began drinking, because somebody, almost by pure accident, had burned a packet of his verses"—

THEREUPON Captain Musgrave raised heavy eyebrows, and guffawed so heartily that the candle flickered. "To think of the fellow's putting it on that plea! when he could so easily have written some more verses. That is the trouble with these poets, if you ask me: they are not practical even in their ordinary, everyday lying. No, no, the truth of it was that the rogue wanted a pretext for making a beast of himself, and seized the first that came to hand."

Cynthia was looking at him in the half-lit room with very flattering admiration. . . . Seen thus, with her scarlet lips a little parted —disclosing pearls—and with her naive dark eyes aglow, she was quite incredibly pretty and caressable.

She had almost forgotten until now that this stalwart soldier, too, was in love with her. But now her spirits were rising venturously, and she knew that she liked Ned Musgrave. He had sensible notions; he saw things as they really were, and with him there would never be any nonsense about top-lofty ideals. Then, too, her dear old white-haired father would be pleased, because there was a very fair estate . . . .

So Cynthia said: "I believe you are right, Ned. I often wonder how they can be so lacking in self-respect. Oh, I am certain you must be right, for it is just what I felt without being able quite to express it. You will stay for supper with us, of course. Yes, but you must, because it is always a great comfort to talk with really sensible persons. I do not wonder that you are not very eager to stay, though, for I am probably a fright, with my eyes red, and with my hair all tumbling down, like an old witch's. Well, let us see what can be done about it, sir! There was a hand-mirror"—

AND thus speaking, she tripped, with very much the reputed grace of a fairy, toward the far end of the room, and standing a-tiptoe, groped at the obscure shelves, with a resultant crash of falling china.

"Oh, but my lovely cups!" said Cynthia, in dismay. "I had forgotten they were up there: and now I have smashed both of them, in looking for my mirror, sir, and trying to prettify myself for you. And I had so fancied them, because they had not their like in England!"

She looked at the fragments, and then at Musgrave, with wide, innocent, hurt eyes. She was honestly grieved by the loss of her quaint toys. But Musgrave, in his sturdy, common-sense way, only laughed at her seriousness over such kickshaws.

"I am for an honest earthenware tankard myself!" he said, jovially, as the two went in to supper.

Interesting St. Louisans—Gottfried Galston

ston's enthusiastic and affectionate discourse. That same case also contains the manuscript of Galston's account of the last days of Busoni.

Works in Greek, Latin, Italian, Hungarian, Russian, French and English are represented, for Galston is familiar with all these languages. He has always been an omnivorous reader and when a boy used to smuggle books of all sorts into his room at home. One day his mother observed that of late his clothes seemed unusually mussed and wrinkled. She went to his clothes closet to investigate and found so many books that there was hardly room for clothes.

GALSTON speaks English fluently, and has always had a passion for English literature. His thorough familiarity with Joyce, whose works are certainly not familiar to great numbers of English - reading people, indicates the range and temper of his literary interests. He is enthusiastic over the French poets, and is widely read in philosophy. Several newly-acquired volumes by Bergson and Santayana were on his desk the evening I visited him. He is one of those book collectors who would spend his last dollar for a book, but he is that exception among collectors in that he buys his books for reading and not merely as curios.

Yet for all this devotion to music and books there is nothing of the recluse or austere intellectual about Galston. He loves conversation and good company and fairly bubbles with enthusiasm. The paintings of the "Surrealistes" in Paris, the ultra-modern music of Shoenberg and the prose rhythms of Joyce—all these he can discuss with the same eager curiosity and understanding with which he discusses old masters like Brahms and Ibsen. And when Galston gets together with men for an evening's conversation, as is not infrequently the case, there is witty and weighty talk well worth the hearing.

Although an authority in music and a well-equipped student of literature and the other arts, Galston wears his attainments as carelessly as he wears his clothes, for he is the most informal and unpretentious of persons. If you come into his home of an evening and do not find him at the piano or with his books you are certain to find him romping boisterously with his two children; Michael, who is six, and Maria, who is three.

Years ago Galston gave a brilliant concert in Russia, the one for which he was given the honorary appointment to the Imperial Conservatory. The St. Petersburg papers praised him extravagantly, but whenever Galston walked about in public he was disconcerted to notice that people pointed him out and said something that sounded painfully like "idiot." Galston knew English, but he didn't know Russian, and after several days of uneasiness he went to a friend and asked him why everybody whispered "idiot" when he passed by. The friend went into a spasm of mirth, finally emerging to inform Galston that "idiot" was Russian for "there he is." Galston thereupon decided that he had better learn the language. This he did, and his knowledge of Russian was to have an important effect on his future life.

For when the war ended Galston attended a party in Berlin where he was introduced to a woman who attracted him greatly. He immediately discovered that she was Russian, and soon the two of them were merrily conversing in her native language. The woman was Alexandra Korsakoff, and not long thereafter they were married. And the reason the Galston house on Raymond avenue is the genuine corner of Bohemia that it is, is in no small measure due to the fact that Mrs. Galston is herself an artist of distinction. Since her arrival in St. Louis there have been several exhibitions of her oil paintings, water colors and batiks at the galleries of the Artists' Guild. Her work, too, was considered of importance abroad, for in an issue of "Die Kunst," a foremost German art magazine, her designs in batik were referred to as among the best in Europe. Her studio is on the top floor of the house.

THE daughter of a court physician attached to the Russian Embassy in China, Mrs. Galston's childhood was spent in the Orient, and there she learned to speak Chinese, an accomplishment she has not yet entirely lost. Because of her youth and her ability to speak Chinese she became a favorite of the Empress Tzi-Hsi, and she has pieces of jewelry, trinkets and garments which the old Empress presented to her.

Although life in Berlin is in more respects than one far different from life in St. Louis, one can readily understand how the Galstons could make the great change without the uneasiness that might attend other families. For the Galstons live in a world of their own, a world of music and art and literature, and this world they have brought with them to St. Louis.

Attacking the Problem of Contented Stenographers.

IT WOULD seem there is something fundamentally wrong with our system of picking stenographers and the condition should be analyzed with a view to bettering it. If the average corporation could assemble all of the stenographers who have resigned from its employ in the last fifteen years—the meeting would need to be held in a convention hall—and question them, some girls would answer, "Oh, I left because they made me stay overtime"; others would reply, "Oh, they all swore at me"; others would reply, "Oh, I quit to get married"; and the remainder would say, "Oh—I dunno." Tabulated, the results would loom up something like this: Angry Because Made To Stay Overtime, 10 per cent; Angry Because Sworn At, 11 per cent; Left To Get Married, 24 per cent; Oh—I Dunno, 55 per cent.

It is these Oh—I Dunno alphabet-bruisers whose problem must be solved. It is apparent they are dissatisfied with something—either the surroundings, the other serfs or the Big Begum himself. Once convinced that a job-applicant is what he wants, the employer should arch his eyebrows, smile coyly and say: "And I trust you're entirely satisfied with me, Miss Ah-Um?" If she nods brightly, he can continue: "Well, then, is everything at the plant here to your liking? Or would you prefer to institute a few changes?" Thus encouraged she could walk around the premises saying, "I think you ought to do the vice-president's office over in beige and navy," "You'll have to fire the head bookkeeper, he looks like a yak," or "You'll have to change your business, I think the glue game is vulgar."

To begin with, an employer should tidy up his stenographer's office so that it won't be cold and bleak like the information bureau in a Federal Reserve bank. This is not to say that he should install a lot of expensive furniture, draperies and rugs to make the place look like the foyer of a movie theater. It needn't be grand, especially. But an atmosphere of warmth and comfort will keep the stenographer happy and this in turn will make her more efficient and you will find her massaging that typewriter so hard she will raise divots.

Her office could be surrounded on three sides by large mirrors which would give her diversified views of her face at all hours and not require her to move over to the washstand every time a curl got out of stance. The walls could be adorned with a number of attractive pictures, including Richard Dix and Thomas Meighan, and perhaps some fluttery subjects which girls love such as a couple of lambs walking down to a brook to get a drink of water and a maid in a floppy green hat picking daisies. This would be a lot more interesting than a faded photograph of 300 men in straw hats and old-fashioned summer suits posing in front of a hotel, and underneath the caption: "The Getzawl Vacuum Sweeper Family in Convention at Atlanta, Ga., June 15-16-17, 1908."

THE stenographer's calendar should be selected with great care. Don't give her a calendar showing the interior of a box factory or a bird's eye view of a packing plant or a locomotive hurtling along the shore of Lake Erie. Remember, she has to look at this calendar twelve months out of the year and there is no sense making her look at the grimy engineer in the locomotive all of this time when she can just as well be admiring Gary Cooper in one of those shirts that have the collar buttons missing.

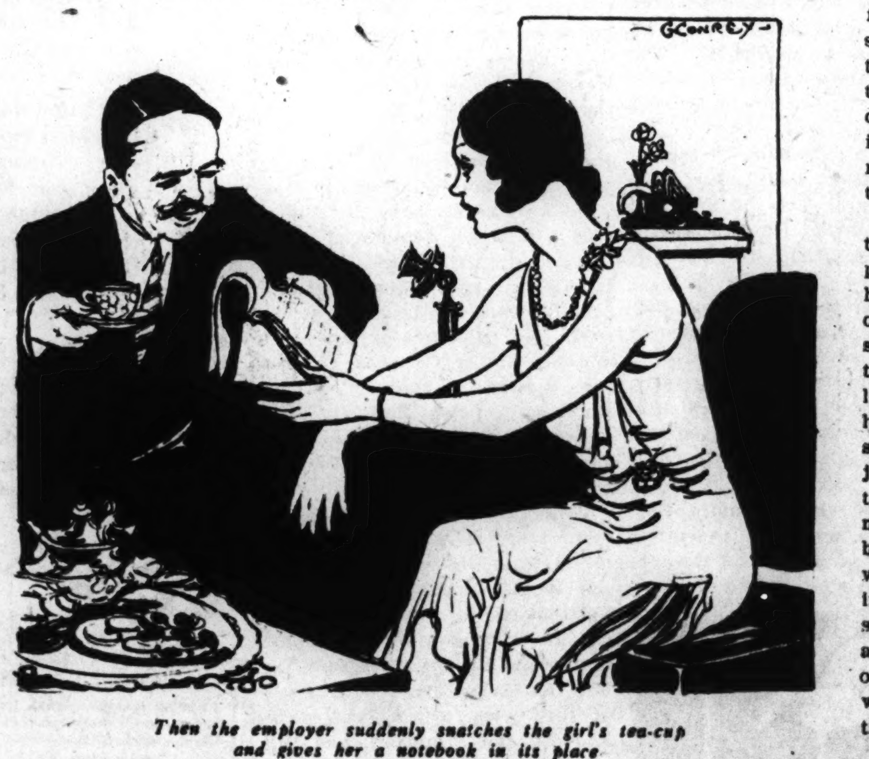
It is understood, of course, that the stenographer involved is a sweet, dainty creature; one of those girls who look up at the caller with big, wondering doll-eyes and a tender smile. She is the type who lisps: "Oh, I'm so sorry, but Mr. Flunk has been called to Minneapolis. What's the name, please? What was the nature of the business? Was there anything I could do for you?" This generally makes the caller fumble with his hat, kick imaginary gravel off of the floor, say "Heh—no—heh—I guess that's all right—heh—well—heh"—and sprint away with a guilty feeling for having bothered the angel.

If the girl is one of these frigid, domineering, reinforced-concrete stenographers, the kind who will be a private secretary some day, there should be a different style of interior decoration. You can fix up her office with all of the packing-plant and locomotive pictures you want and perhaps add some lithographs showing Vesuvius in eruption, Custer's Last Fight and the Spanish Inquisition. These would keep her in a cheerful frame of mind.

If the stenographer happens to be a debutante who is working merely for a lark, the employer should treat her as befits her rank. When he wants her for something, he shouldn't sound a buzzer—this is entirely too businesslike—but should send an office boy bearing an engraved invitation to her. This might read: "The Presence of Miss Elizabeth Whatley Ruysdale is Earnestly Requested At A Tea In The Office of Mr. Herman J. Growl at Three O'Clock February First. R. S. V. P, One-Thousand-Sixty-One Wharf Street." This tea stuff is only a ruse to get her in. If the invitation had read, "For Dictation," the chances are she would have sent polite regrets.

The girl accepts, however, and the boss chats informally over the teacups with her on such subjects as Florida, golf and polo. Then he suddenly snatches her cup and gives her a notebook in its place. Before she can recover from her astonishment, the boss will be walking around with his hands behind his back and chewing a cigar as he dictates: "Mr. A. L. Tubble, The Boston Store, Glide, Ark. Dear Mr. Tubble: Your inquiry of January 25th received and contents noted. In reply would state that the best shades in women's hosiery to our notion are Elephant, Field Rat and Ashes of Coal. Prune Dawn is not doing so well, being similar to Asphalt, which was a wow last season. We therefore take the liberty of shipping you 100 doz. assorted pairs in these three shades and you will find that they all are winners and that Elephant will be especially big. With kind personal regards, I am."

For $22 a week, many men expect a stenographer with the speed of Lieutenant Williams, the spelling ability of Noah Webster and the mentality of Connie Mack. This is expecting entirely too much and an employer should be reasonable in the matter. But at the same time he should be careful lest he hire somebody who turned right at the schoolhouse instead of going inside.



Then the employer suddenly snatches the girl's tea-cup and gives her a notebook in its place

Don't let a girl fool you because she knows the word "incorporate." Every stenographer knows the word "incorporate." It is second nature to them. In fact, when a stenographer goes out to lunch, she will tell the man in the white trench-cap: "I'll have a tuna-fish sandwich on toast and a chocolate malted milk. You might incorporate a little chopped olive in the sandwich and incorporate an egg in the malted milk. . . . One check, please. Just incorporate my girl-friend's bill in mine." And the peculiar part of it is that many girls who know this word "incorporate" will have written the firm inquiring about "the vacant posishun." So this four-syllable flash may be only a bluff.

BEFORE engaging a new stenographer, find out how much time she requires to leave the office. Anywhere from fifteen minutes to a half-hour would be in line, although some of them get away with a whole hour. First, they walk over to the washstand and give themselves a careful once-over to see where repairs should be made. Then they scrub themselves fiercely. The next operation entails the opening of vanity case or satchel and the application of vanishing cream, powder, lipstick and rouge and perhaps eye-polish. Then they are ready to put on the hat.

Putting on the hat is not the simple thing it is with a man. A stenographer does not jam her hat over her head and march out of the office with one arm sticking in an overcoat sleeve and the balance of the coat trailing on the floor. She is decidedly more circumspect. She puts her hat on, tentatively, over the left eye, studies the effect, makes minor adjustments, removes it, tries it over the right eye, makes more adjustments, removes it and finally ends up by clamping it down over the left eye where it was in the first place. Putting on the coat is a comparatively simple process, although it requires a certain amount of strutting in front of a mirror. Then come the gloves, which is the most complicated operation of all.

Happily, most stenographers don't put on their gloves in the office, they merely begin the task. A girl will get a glove started on her left hand and, by the time she has waited for an elevator and been conveyed down to the first floor, she will have the thumb pretty well fixed up. A five-minute walk to a subway or street car will give her ample time to accommodate the index finger, and if she has a twenty or thirty-minute ride before her, the left hand should be entirely covered by the time she gets home. She will walk up the front steps starting the right-hand glove, but, of course, it's unnecessary, unless the house is cold. However, employers are not concerned with this. It is brought up merely to show how much time they are saved when girls don't start working on their gloves in the office.

You might question the applicant closely to find out how much time you stand to lose through such distractions as fire engines, police riot squads, paper snowstorms, riveters and structural steel workers. It is virtually impossible to find a stenographer who will be absolutely immune to these disturbances. If you did find one, the chances are that she would be a crank of some kind and would insist on keeping a bowl of gold-fish on her desk, throw crackers out of the window to wistful-looking sparrows or try to cultivate a geranium.

If you are seriously interested in retaining the services of competent stenographers, you could reward them with service stripes. These service stripes could be in the form of thin diamond bracelets, one band for every two years of service, and the girls would doubtless take a great deal of pride in collecting them.

At any rate, if you come to an understanding on these and similar subjects beforehand, there will be considerably less trouble all around. The stenographer will know just what is expected of her and you will know exactly what is expected of you. And you could feel free to fix up your letter-head with: "Gibble & Zork, Oil-can Manufacturers Since 1849, Correspondence From Contented Stenographers."

It's wonderful how CALUMET'S Double-Action makes all your baking better

Perhaps you have heard people tell of the wonderful "luck" they always have with Calumet. It is Calumet's Double-Action that causes that "luck." Two leavening actions—not merely one. The astonishing test described on this page will show you Calumet's Double-Action.

In baking, Calumet's first action takes place when you add the liquid to the dry ingredients. Then, when you put the batter into the oven, the second leavening action begins, swells through the batter and makes your baking rise beautifully—even though you may not be able to regulate your oven temperature perfectly.

When women have pulled one perfect Calumet cake after another out of their ovens . . . when they have found that biscuits, muffins and waffles which used to be only pretty good, are simply delicious when made with Calumet . . . they naturally tell their friends. That is why Calumet is now the largest selling baking powder in the world.

All baking powders are required by law to be made of pure, wholesome ingredients. But not all baking powders are alike in their action. Not all can give you equally fine results in your baking. Calumet is scientifically made of exactly the right ingredients, in exactly the right proportions to produce perfect leavening action, Double-Action—your assurance of perfect baking results.

Bake some muffins today by the easy Calumet recipe on this page—and see what wonderful results you get.

Notice that the recipe calls for only one level teaspoon of Calumet to each cup of flour. This is the usual Calumet proportion and should be followed for the best results. It gives you a real economy, too.

MAKE THIS TEST — Naturally, when baking, you can't see how Calumet's Double-Action works inside the dough or batter to make it rise. But, by making this simple demonstration with only baking powder and water in a glass, you can see clearly how baking powder acts—and how Calumet acts twice to make your baking better.

Put two level teaspoons of Calumet into a glass, add two teaspoons of water, stir rapidly five times and remove the spoon. The tiny, fine bubbles will rise slowly, half filling the glass. This is Calumet's first action—the action that takes place in the mixing bowl when you add liquid to your dry ingredients.

After the mixture has entirely stopped rising, stand the glass in a pan of hot water on the stove. In a moment a second rising will start and continue until the mixture reaches the top of the glass. This is Calumet's second action—the action that takes place in the heat of your oven.

Make this test. See Calumet's Double-Action which protects your baking from failure.

WHY, JOE, WHERE ARE YOU GOING?
I'M GOING TO THE CLUB—WHERE I CAN LIE DOWN WITHOUT STARTING A PANIC
MEN ARE FUNNY ANIMALS. HE NEVER THOUGHT OF EVEN SITTING ON THAT COUCH BEFORE MY GOSH, AND TO THINK I WAS JUST ON THE POINT OF RESIGNING FROM THIS CLUB!

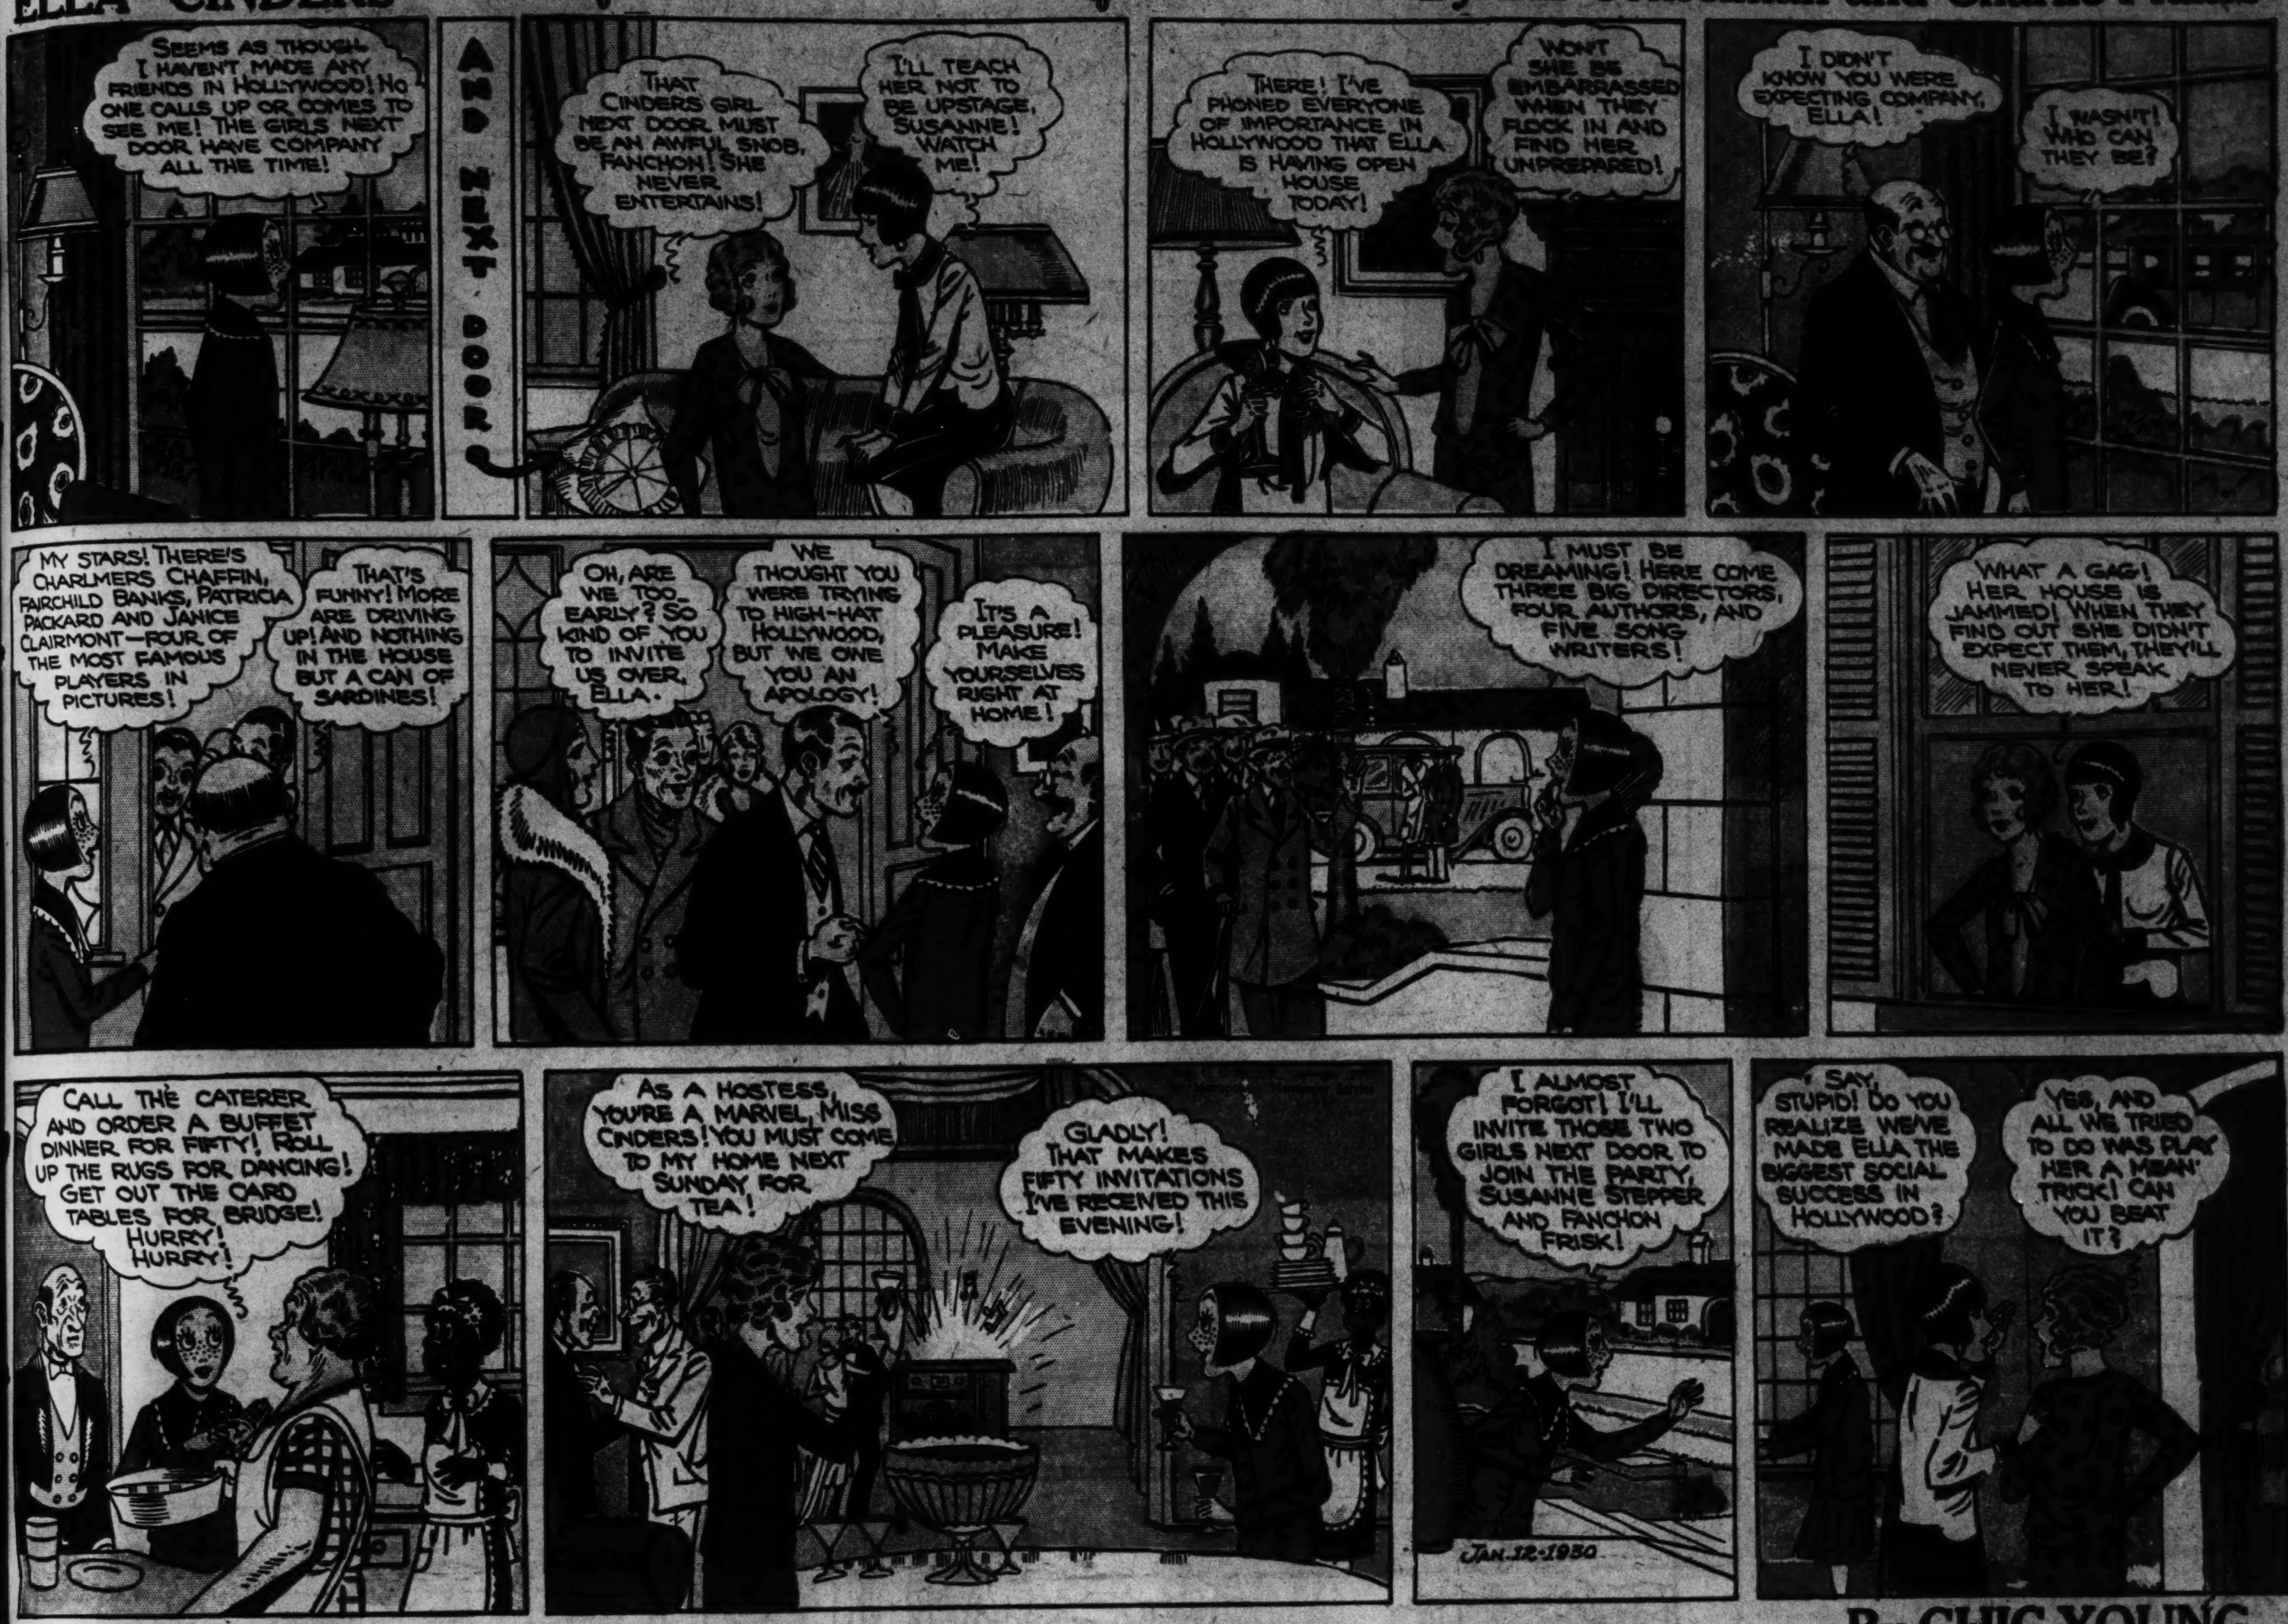
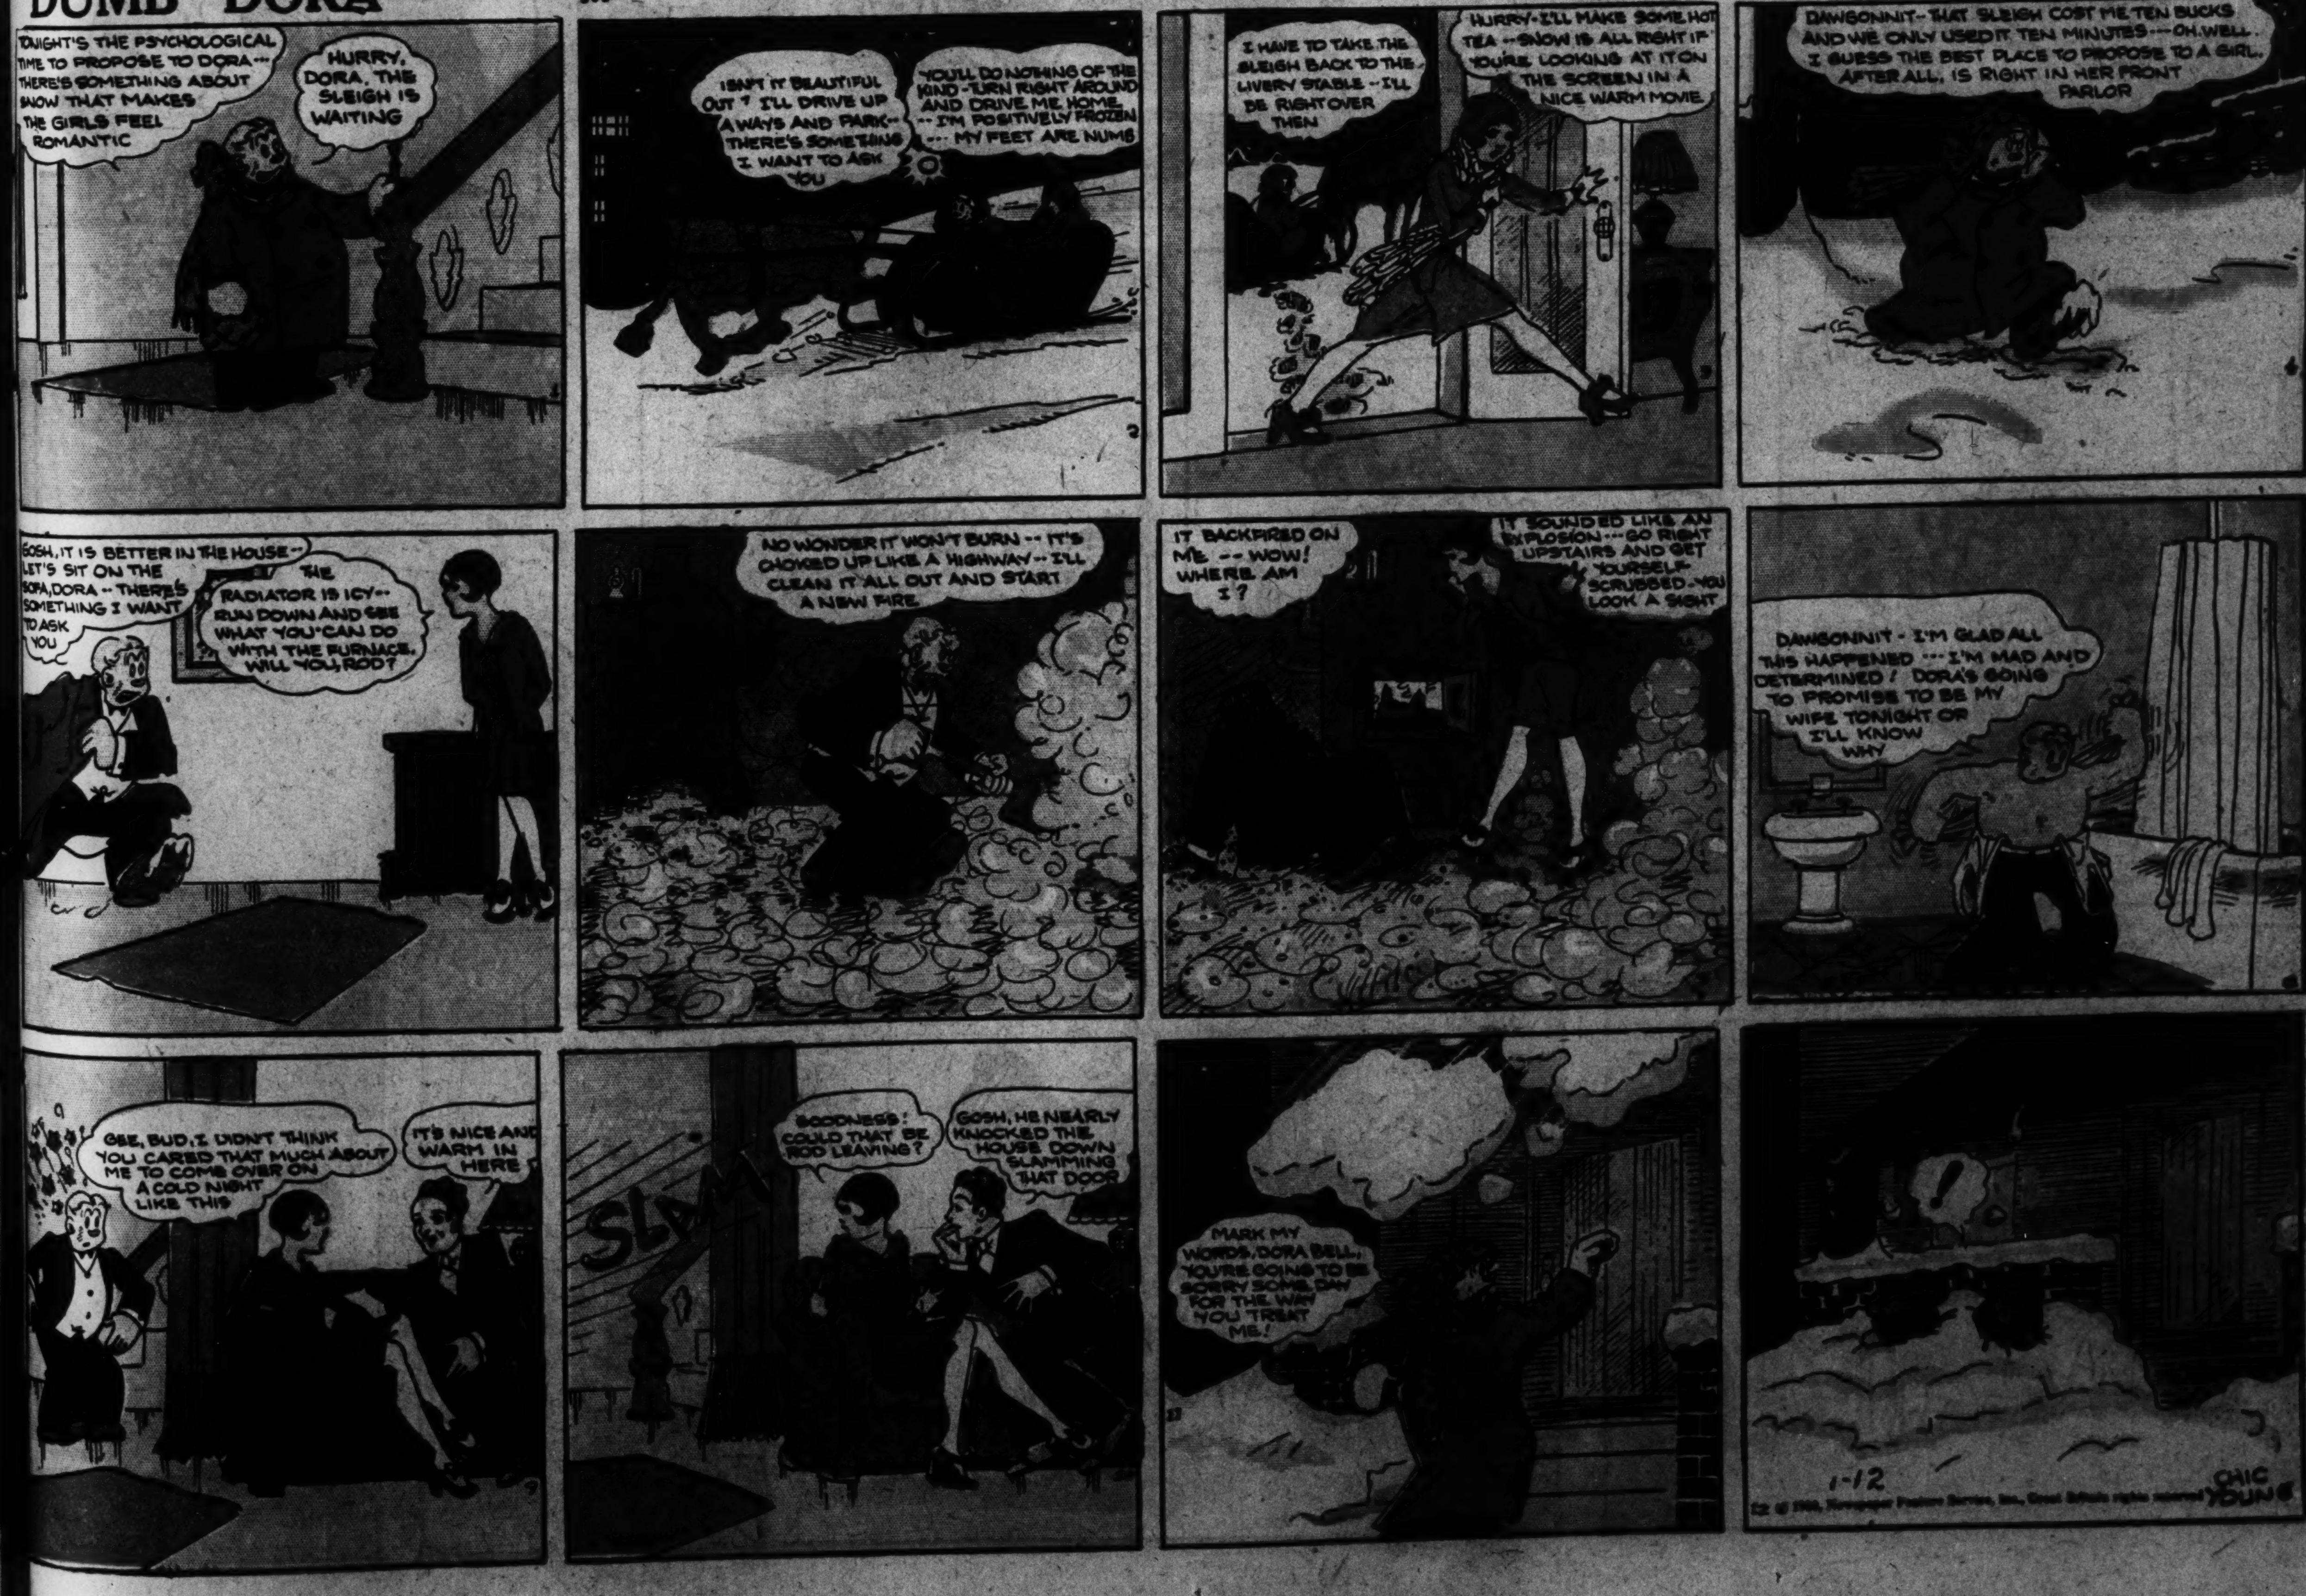
By Bill Conselman and Charlie Plumb



SEEMS AS THOUGH I HAVEN'T MADE ANY FRIENDS IN HOLLYWOOD! NO ONE CALLS UP OR COMES TO SEE ME! THE GIRLS NEXT DOOR HAVE COMPANY ALL THE TIME!
AND NEXT DOOR:
THAT CINDERS GIRL NEXT DOOR MUST BE AN AWFUL SNOB, FANCHON! SHE NEVER ENTERTAINS!
I'LL TEACH HER NOT TO BE UPSTAGE, SUSANNE! WATCH ME!
THERE! I'VE PHONED EVERYONE OF IMPORTANCE IN HOLLYWOOD THAT ELLA IS HAVING OPEN HOUSE TODAY!
WON'T SHE BE EMBARRASSED WHEN THEY FLOCK IN AND FIND HER UNPREPARED!
I DIDN'T KNOW YOU WERE EXPECTING COMPANY, ELLA!
I WASN'T! WHO CAN THEY BE?
MY STARS! THERE'S CHARLMERS CHAFFIN, FAIRCHILD BANKS, PATRICIA PACKARD AND JANICE CLAIRMONT—FOUR OF THE MOST FAMOUS PLAYERS IN PICTURES!
THAT'S FUNNY! MORE ARE DRIVING UP! AND NOTHING IN THE HOUSE BUT A CAN OF SARDINES!
OH, ARE WE TOO EARLY? SO KIND OF YOU TO INVITE US OVER, ELLA.
WE THOUGHT YOU WERE TRYING TO HIGH-HAT HOLLYWOOD, BUT WE OWE YOU AN APOLOGY!
IT'S A PLEASURE! MAKE YOURSELVES RIGHT AT HOME!
I MUST BE DREAMING! HERE COME THREE BIG DIRECTORS, FOUR AUTHORS, AND FIVE SONG WRITERS!
WHAT A GAG! HER HOUSE IS JAMMED! WHEN THEY FIND OUT SHE DIDN'T EXPECT THEM, THEY'LL NEVER SPEAK TO HER!
CALL THE CATERER AND ORDER A BUFFET DINNER FOR FIFTY! ROLL UP THE RUGS FOR DANCING! GET OUT THE CARD TABLES FOR BRIDGE! HURRY! HURRY!
AS A HOSTESS, YOU'RE A MARVEL, MISS CINDERS! YOU MUST COME TO MY HOME NEXT SUNDAY FOR TEA!
GLADLY! THAT MAKES FIFTY INVITATIONS I'VE RECEIVED THIS EVENING!
I ALMOST FORGOT! I'LL INVITE THOSE TWO GIRLS NEXT DOOR TO JOIN THE PARTY, SUSANNE STEPPER AND FANCHON FRISK!
JAN. 12-1930
SAY, STUPID! DO YOU REALIZE WE'VE MADE ELLA THE BIGGEST SOCIAL SUCCESS IN HOLLYWOOD?
YES, AND ALL WE TRIED TO DO WAS PLAY HER A 'MEAN' TRICK! CAN YOU BEAT IT?

DUMB DORA

By CHIC YOUNG



TONIGHT'S THE PSYCHOLOGICAL TIME TO PROPOSE TO DORA --- THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT SNOW THAT MAKES THE GIRLS FEEL ROMANTIC
HURRY, DORA, THE SLEIGH IS WAITING
ISN'T IT BEAUTIFUL OUT? I'LL DRIVE UP A WAYS AND PARK-- THERE'S SOMETHING I WANT TO ASK YOU
YOU'LL DO NOTHING OF THE KIND - TURN RIGHT AROUND AND DRIVE ME HOME -- I'M POSITIVELY FROZEN --- MY FEET ARE NUMB
I HAVE TO TAKE THE SLEIGH BACK TO THE LIVERY STABLE -- I'LL BE RIGHT OVER THEN
HURRY - I'LL MAKE SOME HOT TEA -- SNOW IS ALL RIGHT IF YOU'RE LOOKING AT IT ON THE SCREEN IN A NICE WARM MOVIE
DAWGONNIT - THAT SLEIGH COST ME TEN BUCKS AND WE ONLY USED IT TEN MINUTES --- OH, WELL. I GUESS THE BEST PLACE TO PROPOSE TO A GIRL, AFTER ALL, IS RIGHT IN HER FRONT PARLOR
GOSH, IT IS BETTER IN THE HOUSE -- LET'S SIT ON THE SOFA, DORA -- THERE'S SOMETHING I WANT TO ASK YOU
THE RADIATOR IS ICY -- RUN DOWN AND SEE WHAT YOU CAN DO WITH THE FURNACE, WILL YOU, ROD?
NO WONDER IT WON'T BURN -- IT'S CHOKED UP LIKE A HIGHWAY -- I'LL CLEAN IT ALL OUT AND START A NEW FIRE
IT BACKFIRED ON ME -- WOW! WHERE AM I?
IT SOUNDED LIKE AN EXPLOSION --- GO RIGHT UPSTAIRS AND GET YOURSELF SCRUBBED - YOU LOOK A SIGHT
DAWGONNIT - I'M GLAD ALL THIS HAPPENED --- I'M MAD AND DETERMINED! DORA'S GOING TO PROMISE TO BE MY WIFE TONIGHT OR I'LL KNOW WHY
GEE, BUD, I DIDN'T THINK YOU CARED THAT MUCH ABOUT ME TO COME OVER ON A COLD NIGHT LIKE THIS
IT'S NICE AND WARM IN HERE
SLAM
GOODNESS! COULD THAT BE ROD LEAVING?
GOSH, HE NEARLY KNOCKED THE HOUSE DOWN SLAMMING THAT DOOR
MARK MY WORDS, DORA BELL, YOU'RE GOING TO BE SORRY SOME DAY FOR THE WAY YOU TREAT ME!

ARAB HAVE YOU NO AMBITION? NO DESIRE TO WORK?
WORK? YOU MEAN THE WORD THAT BEGINS WITH THE SAME LETTER AS WORRY AND WEEP?
YOU CANT AWAYS GO DOWN THE ROAD LIKE A ROLLING STONE!
YEAH, DONT FORGET THAT A ROLLING STONE GOES PLACES AND SEES THINGS!
REMEMBER, IT'S THE BUSY BEE THAT GETS THE HONEY!
AND THEN, ALONG COMES A WISE BIRD THAT TAKES IT AWAY FROM HIM!
SURELY YOU MUST HAVE SOME PLANS FOR THE FUTURE?
I HAVE INDEED! BUT THEY'RE A DEEP SECRET! I'M LEARNING HOW TO BE A MATTRESS MAKER!
A WHATRESS MAKER?
WHETHER IN LATER YEARS I DECIDE TO BECOME A DOCTOR, A LAWYER, A MERCHANT OR A POLITICIAN, FIRST I LEARN HOW TO MAKE A SOFT MATTRESS!
THEN I SUPPOSE YOU'LL CARRY THE MATTRESS UP A HIGH MOUNTAIN, CHANGE YOUR NAME TO RIP VAN WINKLE AND THEN SLEEP FOR TWENTY YEARS
NO, NO, NO, NO, GET THIS STRAIGHT, THIS ISN'T GOING TO BE A SLEEPING MATTRESS!
THIS AFORESAID MATTRESS IS ONLY FOR AN EMERGENCY!
NOW TO THE POINT, BEFORE STARTING MY CAREER I MAKE MYSELF A FINE BIG SOFT MATTRESS-
WHAT HAS THE MATTRESS GOT TO DO WITH YOUR CAREER?
YOU SEE! IF THINGS GO WRONG I'LL STILL HAVE SOMETHING SOFT TO FALL BACK ON!
LISTEN, MARGY, BE REASONABLE IF YOU LET ME IN, I WONT CRACK WISE AGAIN!
